Penalizes Self-Help

Need for a change in the policy of self-help for those on relief, is brought out in the report of Governor Martin's relief investigating committee. Everything possible should be done to encourage those on relief to get out and find work for themselves.

As pointed out in the report certain policies followed do not give this encouragement, but rather have the opposite effect. Under present rulings a worker is given a work order for as many hours' work each month as is necessary to meet his budget deficiency. This work only covers a part of the person's time. The report shows that if this worker shows the initiative to go out and secure casual private employment in an effort to supplement his family income, his next month's work allowance is reduced by the amount of such outside work. As there is nothing certain about this casual employment from month to month, the report says, heads of families hesitate to jeopardize their earnings from relief work by securing self-help work of such nature, whereas the objective of all relief work should be to encourage the relief worker to become self-sufficient at the earliest possible moment. The present system, according to the committee, placing as it does a penalty upon his efforts to become self-sustaining, tends to hold him on relief and discourage personal initiative.

Not the slightest obstacle should be placed in the way of self-help, rather it should have every encouragement.

Large Amount Spent Relief

SERA Officials Speak Before C. of C. Meet.

$883 local contribution when completed.

Total of 29 school district projects have been taken up during the year, according to Mills. Sixteen have been completed with costs of $887 (63 per cent) for labor and $3257 local contribution (37 per cent). The 13 not completed cost $3750 (73 per cent) for labor and $4243 (73 per cent) local contribution when finished. Total for the 29 projects was set at $21,700 (68 per cent) expenditures by the government and $8926 (32 per cent) local contribution.

Relief cases amount to 8.9 per cent of the county population for 1934, Mills declared. State average was 12 per cent. Multnomah county 18.6 per cent. Total of 42 new cases were opened last month. That the transient problem still exists was demonstrated by the fact that 30 such cases are now listed on the county relief rolls.

Activities of the employment division of the relief program was explained by Leon S. Davis, place-ment manager. He pointed out that work was found for employable persons on relief wherever possible on SERA projects or in private industry. Employment records of the men are studied in an endeavor to place them in lines for which they are qualified.

Necessity of placing men in private industry in order to save their self respect was stressed by Davis. New industries will be needed to absorb these men. It is practically impossible for them to regain their former employment in Portland.

Approximately 80 per cent are men who are on the outer fringe of employment prior to the depression and are now stranded. Another class includes men 60 to 70 years of age who, though skilled workers, cannot be returned to industry class and are in the very few who are using the SERA as a means to get out of hard work.

That the rehabilitation of unemployed on farms is one solution is stressed by Davis. The opinion expressed by Davis was the opinion expressed by the committee.

Total of 39 projects have been completed under SERA and 35 are now under way. Payrolls in April included 493 men and women and last week 192 men and 39 women.

County branch of the state employment service was explained by Davis, who declared that all types of employment prior to the depression and are now stranded. Another class includes men 60 to 70 years of age who, though skilled workers, cannot be returned to industry class and are in the very few who are using the SERA as a means to get out of hard work.
