Make Progress

Visit of local business people to the modern plant operated by the Oregon Dairy Co-operative association in Portland Monday was an eye-opener to many who did not realize the advancement made by the organization, which takes in hundreds of Washington county dairymen in the county's biggest industry.

Great strides have been made in this association since those hectic days of the milk war back in 1931 and they are due in large measure to good and efficient management and the assistance of loyal officers and the hundreds of loyal members.

The business people of this community were happy to visit the plant and see the progress made. They are happy to have been able to help with the advancement of this great industry that means so much to every individual in this county. They will continue to assist it for the good of their neighbors and of themselves. May the dairymen of this county always feel that they can call on the business people of Hillsboro and its business organizations to co-operate whenever necessary.

The Argus has helped in a small measure and will continue to do so during the years that it will serve this community.

Additional honors came to Hillsboro people during the past week, all of which help to put the old town on the map. Congratulations are due Hugh Rogers on his election as senior vice-commander of the United Spanish War Veterans in Oregon and W. C. Christensen on his selection as secretary-treasurer of the Independent Bankers of Oregon, both of whom are highly regarded and respected local citizens.

Forest Grove National bank is doing a fine work for the youth of Washington county in the promotion of the annual sheep show. By creating the desire among youth to excel in farm or any other kind of work the bank is giving that boy or girl a boost on the road to success.

What Other Editors Say

And They Call it Liberty League

Those who have followed activities of the Liberty League find no reason for surprise in its latest move to defeat amendments to the Agricultural act. In fact, the AAA itself must be anathema to such a representative group of reactionaries as is to be found in the list of those admitting membership in this parody on Liberty—the Liberty League.

Coincident with the statement of the Liberty League that "No more dishonest piece of legislation has come before congress than the proposed AAA amendments," we find a series of suits filed in the validity of processing taxes, have been filed by—whom would you think?—milling companies, packers and many of the groups which prior to the AAA, had the farmer and producer, to quote their one big joke, "Just where they wanted him." Where he could be forced to sell his wheat, his cotton and his pork, and everything else he could raise, at the price the jobber and wholesaler chose to pay him, with a minimum of profit during the "fat" years and at an actual loss in "lean" year, but with profits always assured to the jobber and wholesaler any kind of a year. These predatory groups are the authors of the oft-repeated adage: "We who have invested our capital help the farmer to market his produce and are entitled to a fair return," but in too many instances "fair return" represented all the profit, while the farmer, who also had invested his capital and had contributed years of hard and sometimes fruitless work, was told that the law of supply and demand had ordained that there was no profit, and, sometimes, not even any return for him.

It was the AAA which threatened to change the setup, for wise members of the government, who had learned that many of the middlemen are of parasitic growth, had devised ways and means to provide for their control, if not complete eradication, and at the same time planned to force big operators and food and other produce to take a share of the loss if they desired to take all the profit. For these reasons, it is easy to see why the Liberty League and its wealthy sponsors are now making a combined attack on various sections of the AAA, in the hope that the same supreme court which took the heart out of NRA and left the little business man at the mercy of the big fellows, might again put the farmers "where they belong" in relation to Big Business. Truly a noble spectacle!—Hood River News.

Bicycling Boy Killed

A newspaper carrier boy at Eugene was killed a few days ago when his bicycle was struck by a car being driven at high speed.

The district attorney could find no grounds sufficient for action against the driver of the death car. The circuit judge, when the district attorney refused to act, put his court machinery to rest and investigation was held, with the result that blame was placed upon the boy who was no longer here to tell his story.

The Sentinel does not attempt to place the blame, but it does call attention to the fact that bicycling boys and girls in Cottage Grove are every day escaping death only through the efforts of their car operators. Children every day on bicycles turn in the middle of blocks in the business section, ride on the wrong side of the street in the business section, cut corners on the wrong side of the street in front of oncoming cars, swing around corners and in front of cars without warning of any kind.

Some day a mangled boy or girl is going to be picked out of the wreckage of his or her bicycle and the coroner's jury is going to say that the girl or boy was at fault.

It is passing strange that parents, who can't help but know the careless ways of boy and girl bicyclists, permit their youngsters to ride their bicycles through traffic unnecessarily, and most of the bicycling in the business section is entirely unnecessary. Most of the children pedaling around the business section are merely out for joy rides.

Even if girls and boys on bicycles made any pretense to observe traffic regulations, which they do not, they have no business in congested district unless it is necessary for them to be there.

A good way to prevent tragedy is to keep children away from where tragedies are likely to happen.—Cottage Grove Sentinel.

Insincere Protest

Protest of striking lumber workers and the NEWF and other strike sympathizers against use of peace officers in Oregon and National Guardsmen in Washington to preserve the peace and prevent violence is obviously insincere. They charge the traffic unnecessarily, and most of the bicycling in the business section is entirely unnecessary. Most of the children pedaling around the business section are merely out for joy rides.

Even if girls and boys on bicycles made any pretense to observe traffic regulations, which they do not, they have no business in congested district unless it is necessary for them to be there.

A good way to prevent tragedy is to keep children away from where tragedies are likely to happen.—Cottage Grove Sentinel.

"Martin's Enemies Active," reads a headline. And Oregonians who believe in fair play are not entirely somnolent.—Hood River News.

Neil Richardson Writes About His Experiences on Around-World Tour

Excerpts from other letters from Neil Richardson of Hillsboro to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Richardson, tell of life and experiences on an around-the-world tour as a cadet officer on the Dollar liner "President Johnson." He left here April 18.

S. S. President Johnson Singapore to Penang June 4, 1935

I enjoyed Singapore very much. We arrived on Friday night instead of Saturday morning as was scheduled because we had to make a rubber quota or something. While we were there I got fitted for an Irish linen suit and it's plenty nice. A double-breasted bi-swing, with plaids in the pockets and everything that one can wear in the states. I also got a khaki uniform and the whole thing came to $15.50 Singapore money or about $9 U. S. gold. Everyone here wears either white poplin, linen, duck, or some light material. I got my films developed here. Three rolls and they didn't turn out so good. I took them to some Chink store and they said that the films were undeveloped. They might be right and it might be in the developing or printing. The pictures aren't all bad, but they aren't as good as I expected. Pictures of the coast lines and pictures taken at a distance are rather blurry and hazy. I took about a roll of films in Singapore and I hope they turn out better, because there are some interesting ones.

Yesterday the night pantryman and I took a car for the morning from about 7:30 to 11:30. He is a kid about 19 and is making his third trip. We left the ship and drove about 14 miles out to the Singapore zoo, where we fed the animals. Most of the animals can be seen in U. S. zoos except some of the birds and animals that live only in the tropics. We got to see a mouse deer, and a Malayan bear, and some other funny looking things. Herons walk around very uncaged. A lady elephant in there and we fed her most of the bananas we had left. It was very interesting and a lot of fun. From there we drove back to the hotel. We passed rubber plantations and coconut plantations, one after another. We stopped at one of the native stores and bought some Mangosteens and Rubertus. They are a tropical fruit and very good. Our driver stopped at one of the homes of a wealthy Chinese in Singapore and we were allowed to go through it as it was open to the public. One room was as beautifully furnished as any I have ever seen. One day I saw in Los Angeles. Talk about pounded silver vases and things, they sure had them. After the visit there we went to the botanical gardens and there we saw a very interesting collection of plants and trees. We had lunch at the hotel and then we went to the zoo. They come right up, or drop down from the trees and would sit and eat out of your hand. Here are some pictures of them. The only trouble is telling which are the monkeys. The gardens are very beautiful and each and every tree and shrub is labeled, although we didn't have much time to walk around. The whole trip cost us $2 gold apiece or $4. I got a great kick out of walking down through the native quarters and looking at the stores. Many times you will not see another white man all morning and I feel very glad that I have eaten my spinach and grown as big in comparison with the Chinks, Sykes and Malays that live here, because it seems to me that they are just like to knock you over the head at any moment if they thought they could get away with it.

Van and I hired some bikes one night and rode around, which was a lot of fun.

The Sultan of Johore is on board with us. He is going to Colombo with us. We have a special flag for him and he is the main topic of conversation. I have heard that he is one of the richest men in the world, and I wouldn't doubt it.

Frank Buck and his wife are friends of the captain and were down to lunch. There is so much to tell that I could take all night.

S. S. Pres. Johnson Penang to Colombo June 9, 1935

Well we are just about to the supposed "Garden Spot of the World." As yet we haven't sighted land but we probably will within the next six hours. It is nice and warm up on deck, although there is quite a wind blowing and every once in a while a spray will break over the deck. The ship's orchestra is playing for the crew today, the first time they have played for the crew since we left San Francisco. I stood my two-hour watch today, as I do every Saturday and Sunday. About a half an hour to take the post, and then I went around, then a half an hour stand-by, then an hour at the wheel. This watch the course was 268 minutes and if you look that up somewhere you will find it is almost due west.

While in Penang I had a funny experience. I had gone ashore and bought a Chinese Coolie hat and was talking to Van about it before I turned in (Van was at the gang-way). Another fellow, who was just like to knock you over the head about it and we got to talking. We talked and talked and he told me all about himself. He had lived in Penang for about 2 1/2 years, was born in Lexington, Ky., schooled in England and talked with a decided English accent. He had been around the world six times and in almost every country. He told me that at one time he had been so poor in China that he had to live on four coppers a day, and had been so rich as to be able to lose 200,000 Straits dollars in two months. He had large land and real estate holdings in Ceylon, but when he didn't pay the taxes the government seized them, and he was afraid to go back or the government would seize him. He was 31, retired now, and claimed to be one of the laziest men in the world. Got the small income he lives on now by renting rooms in his big house in Penang. We talked for about three-quarters of an hour and finally he asked me to go up town to get something to eat, so I went with him. We took a rickshaw (two of us in one) and as we rode along he pointed out the places of interest and told me about them. He spoke Chinese and Malayan and so directed the rickshaw driver in Chinese. The place we went to was run by Chinese, and true to their custom they brought us a small tray with six little dishes on it and two small forks. One dish contained peanuts, an other white beans (he gave the Chinese name for them), pineapple, native radishes, cucumbers, and the sixth a sauce. Of course you eat the peanuts and the white beans with your fingers, but any of the others you take on your fork and dip in the sauce. After we ate he told me he would take me to an opera. Where we went there were two Chinese operas and one Mayola. The Chinese were too fast and as it was in the Pekin dialect he couldn't translate very well. But he told me all about the Mayola one. After this he invited me down to his house to see his furniture. This was his one hobby, and of course he was very proud of it, and after I saw it I should say that he had a right to be.

Most of his things were over 500 years old and very few under 100. He had many, many cabinets and chests finished in gold. It is real gold, too, because the Chinese have a superstition that evil spirits infest things made of gold. The cabinets were not pretty, but they surely must have been valuable. He had screens, tapestries and such all over. Finally after talking a little while longer I had to say good-bye and beat it back to the ship. He invited me to have dinner with him next time and take a trip along the island, this was in case he was still there.

Penang was very much like Singapore so there isn't much to say.

Talked to the Sultan. He asked me if the captain was in his room and if I could have sandwiches brought up there.

Van and I went through three or four temples and also through Mohammed Mosque. We had to take off our shoes to go through it and I'll bet we looked plenty funny.

S. S. President Johnson Colombo to Bombay June 13, 1935

Here's the letter from that Colombo was a grand place even if I didn't get to see so much of it. Arrived at 6 a. m. amid a drizzle of rain and anchored out in the bay. As soon as the rain stopped I got to know some fellows that are in the crew, too. We bought some post cards and looked at jewelry. Colombo is the home of amethysts, sapphires, rubies, emeralds, opals and other precious and semi-precious stones. Almost every other store is selling them.

I am just beginning to get onto the value of money. I spent my money rather foolishly in the first few ports. As we get to more ports I am beginning to get wise to myself, and to pay only a half to a third of what they ask, and then buy only what I want, instead of what I'm trying to buy because I think I am getting a bargain. All the business men are shrewd salesmen and will argue for a half an hour over five cents. It is very different from the U. S., where most all things are sold for a profit of about two to three times what they want and hope and argue for the best.

A New Deal for Sanitation

(By Oregon State Board of Health)

Sanitation is the key to a healthy community. It is the foundation upon which a sound public health program is built. In the past, sanitation was often neglected, and the result was a high incidence of disease and a general state of filth and decay. Today, however, there is a growing realization of the importance of sanitation, and a new era of public health is dawning.

The Panama canal would never have been completed had not the U. S. government sent in their sanitary engineers to clean up. Fever and disease defeated the French government, not the lack of engineering ability. Now the Panama zone is a sanitary center.

Cross connections in the water supply system of some hotels in the Loop district of Chicago caused pollution of the water system, bringing illness and death to many of the fair visitors.

The past twenty-five years have witnessed a great change in the plumbing industry. Now the comparatively low cost of fixtures and installations have placed good plumbing within the reach of all. There is hardly a farm house that cannot boast of a modern bathroom, kitchen and laundry. Less than twenty years ago, a bathroom mentioned in a for-rent ad in the city newspaper was considered a "drawing card."

Plumbing is essentially a health measure, but unless it is installed by skilled men with a thorough knowledge of the principles of sanitation, it may easily become a menace to the life and health of the people, instead of a source of pleasure and comfort. The 1935 legislature, realizing this, at their recent session placed the jurisdiction over plumbing regulations in the hands of Oregon only, and authorized a board of health and authorized to examine persons following the calling of plumbers as to their ability and knowledge and to issue to those who qualified "Certificates of Competency."

When a plumber comes to your home after August 12, demand that he show you his certificate of competency. It is your assurance of safe, sanitary plumbing installations by competent mechanics, and value you have every right to expect for your money.

Don't forget, Mr. and Mrs. Home Owner, that "Certificate of Competency" is for your protection.

It's Clever to Be a Clipper

"Madam, do you know that it's clever to be a clipper?" To become a clipper at one clip, so to speak, just see that the shears are handy when you sit down to read your newspaper. As you spot an advertisement or something that interests you, clip it out and take it with you.

Merchants who advertise with us are glad to have you ask for specific merchandise. And sometimes it's helpful to refer to the advertisement when you're right in the store.

At all events, a clipping pinned to your shopping list helps you to remember this particular errand. It simplifies and shortens a shopping trip so much to know what you want and where to get it.

AN AFTER-THOUGHT

The night is clear with full moon shining brightly through the night sky. My bed is deep on pine boughs soft and sweet. Whose scent shall soothe and heal me. Oh! I ask for no better place to sleep.

The mocking bird gives music to my ear. It seems that if he sings he must see. At any hour I wake, his song, I hear. How vain to think 'tis meant only for me!

The river too, sings, as it flows along. And out of joy, my heart would sing a song— My cup is full—I do not ask for more.

And with such wealth and peace, I wonder why I should be sad. At one large mansion where I asked for bread. There was a teardrop in the nation's eye.

And as I thanked her, why my own heart bled— HOMER B. THURSTON, (a poetaster) Oregon City, Gen. Del.
