Capitol News Letter

(Continued from page one) three representatives in the state legislature. French, publisher of the Sherman County Journal, is a republican. The other newspapermen in the house are Moore Hamilton, youthful publisher of the Medford News, and Clint "Want-to-go-home" Haight of the Blue Mountain Eagle at Canyon City.

Although members of the state board of control have practically abandoned any idea of changing the location of the capitol building negotiations still continue between the committee recently named by Governor Martin and trustees of Willamette university for purchase of the 14-acre university campus for capitol purposes.

Architects continue to press their arguments for a larger capitol site than that afforded by the old location. Recommendations prepared by the Oregon chapter of the American Institute of Architects call for a site of at least 20 acres for the new building. At the same time other plans have been prepared for the possible relocation of Willamette university on 40 acres of land on the east side of the "Brush" pasture in south Salem in the event the present campus is sold to the state.

Governor Martin conferred with his planning board in Portland relative to plans for the new capitol Friday and it is expected that the formal application for a federal grant for 45 per cent of the $3,500,000 estimated as needed for the new building will be ready to forward to Washington, D. C., within a few days. As soon as the federal grant is approved, the grant money earmarked and the terms of the grant made known the governor has said that he would issue the call for the special session of the legislature to authorize construction of the new building and make provision for the state's share of the cost.

First of the federal grant money for the coast highway bridges was received by the highway commission this week in the amount of $350,000. The federal government has agreed to contribute 30 per cent of the total cost of the five bridges as an outright gift to the state. The loan of $4,200,000 made by the PWA to finance the state's share of the bridge cost is being refinanced through sale of general obligation bonds at a much lower interest rate than that carried by the federal loan.

A decided improvement in business conditions throughout Oregon is indicated by collections of the World War Veterans' State Aid commission which have averaged $138,000 a month since January 1, last, compared to a monthly average of $111,000 in 1933 and $123,000 in 1934.

The state insurance department turned $673,417 into the general fund during the first six months of 1935. This represents an increase of $43,000 over the turn-over for the same period last year.
