County's Largest Department Store Built Through Metropolitan Methods

Nathan Weil

R. W. Weil

Employment of metropolitan methods of sales, stock and service in the Hillsboro area has more than proven its worth during the past 22 years, building Weil's department store into the largest such enterprise in Washington county. In addition, the four partners, Nathan, R. W. Morris and Jake Weil, feel confident that these same principles have made the establishment of their predecessor, the store in Oregon, outside of Portland, carrying exclusively wearing apparel for men, women and children.

The Weils first came to Hillsboro in September, 1913, buying up the stock of the "People's Store," a stock company which had just failed. At that time they did not contemplate the establishment of a permanent store in this area, but after a few months, realizing the future business possibilities in Washington county, decided to locate here despite the close proximity of Portland.

Nathan, Jake and Sam Weil, the latter now conducting one of the most exclusive ladies' ready-to-wear shops in Hollywood, were the first to arrive in Hillsboro and completed the purchase of the People's store stock. The business at that time was located, as that of their predecessor, in the Tamieste building at Third and Main streets, the site now occupied by Lester Ireland & Company. Sales space available then was only about one third of that now used by the hardware store.

Business increased rapidly and in 1916 R. W. and Morris Weil, who had been operating a chain of dry goods stores in Washington, came to Hillsboro. During the period of the war, Jake and Morris served in the army and R. W. became general manager.

Need for additional space to keep abreast of the ever-increasing business became more apparent each year and in March, 1919, the partners purchased the old Tualatin hotel property on Main street and started construction of the present modern store building. The old hotel had been a Hillsboro landmark for nearly 75 years and when the building was torn down it was found that wooden pegs had been used in the original part of the structure instead of nails.

The new store was occupied on December 1, 1919, with nearly 12,000 square feet of floor space available for sales, display and office room. A large basement provided an additional 4000 square feet for stock rooms.

Commenting on the new structure, an article in the November 27, 1919, issue of the Argus declared in part, "No structure in Hillsboro, aside from the Carnation plant, has represented so large an investment and in all Washington county there is no mercantile building which is so complete in its arrangement. Lighting system is one of the features of the building. Skylights and windows are so arranged that every portion of the large salesroom is as light as the out-of-doors and the electric fixtures for evening use are the latest in design and effect." The building is a credit to the city and to the progressiveness of its builders.

Average of 16 persons, exclusive of the four partners, are employed in the store, while the employment at seasonal peaks is approximately 29 and during the holiday season as high as 35. In addition, two janitors are employed. Annual payroll of the firm is in excess of $15,000, exclusive of executive salaries.

For five years the Weils operated a second store in Washington county. This was located at Forest Grove and was opened in partnership with their predecessor, the management of Jake Weil. The first store site was in the Tipton block and in 1920 the firm purchased the Caples' Department store across the street from the present American Legion hall. Two years later the store was moved to the Broderson building Jake Weil operated the store from 1919 to 1923 and during 1924 A. Haas, an uncle of the Weil brothers, was manager. At the end of that time the store was closed out in order to concentrate all interests in the Hillsboro business.

Three dry goods stores were located in the Tamieste building before Weil's was established. The first was the "A. Gross store," started in December, 1909, just after the structure was completed. The firm of Allen & Wright bought the store in April, 1911, and operated the business until March, 1912, when they were succeeded by the "People's store," a stock company.

Strict adherence to a policy of giving customers the benefit of quality merchandise at lowest prices and the maximum of service has been the secret of the local store's success, according to the partners. They pride themselves on giving Washington county patrons a wide selection of nationally advertised merchandise lines and experienced service that are often not found in larger stores and cities.

The fact that they have never knowingly been undersold on quality goods and that they have made every effort to provide dressmaking, knitting and other instructions for their customers.

Merchandising experience of the firm runs back to 1891 when Nathan Weil organized, with his two brothers, the "Palace Department Store" in Spokane, Wash. They returned to Spokane in 1901 and continued in the department store business there until they came to Hillsboro in 1913.

Give Yourself this GOOD ADVICE

It's a waste of time and money to keep on using worn-out washing equipment or old-fashioned methods, when a new Maytag could save so much on your weekly clean-clothes expense. And it's foolish to consider a cheap washer when, TODAY, you can get a genuine Maytag at its present low price.
