Big Guns of War on Waste

NO, THIS isn't a view of a coast-guard battery—it's an unusual camera shot from the roof of the largest high-pressure steam power house in the world at the Ford Rouge plant, Dearborn, Mich. Strictly speaking, these are not "smoke" stacks, because a smoking stack means waste fuel, and Henry Ford does not approve of waste. The eight huge stacks, rising 199 feet from the roof and 333 feet from the ground level, are being repainted. The inset photo shows a crew of men at work on one. It's no slight job because the 66,461 square feet—an acre and one-half—of stack surface will use up 152 gallons of aluminum paint and 16 gallons of black paint. Each stack is approximately 25 1/2 feet around at the roof apron, 17 1/2 feet around from five feet above the roof to 35 feet up, and 38 feet around from there to the top. Big guns in Ford's war on waste.

WAKING People Up Isn't Always So Easy A lot of alarm clocks could testify to that. There's one "alarm clock" in the business field that can't be beat for rousing laggard sales from their slumbers--and that's a judicious use of newspaper advertising. The idea that you have "nothing to advertise this week" implies that you have nothing to offer to the public. Tell them your story each week--they'll listen. People actually read ads, you know--after all you, read this one, didn't you? DELTA DRUG STORE With Which is Combined the Hillsboro Independent, Established 1873
