Safeguards the Public

Contrary to what may be the belief of some, public advertisements by tax-levying bodies such as the county budget are studied earnestly and carefully by hundreds of taxpayers throughout the county. This is probably more true of the farm taxpayer, who takes a great deal of interest in public affairs.

The light of publicity on public financial affairs is a necessity and a safeguard to the people, proven so over years of experience. The few dollars spent on this publicity is well spent and saves many, many times what it costs. A recent example of this kind was pointed out by the Astorian-Budget at Astoria, where the light of publicity, staffed off wasteful expenditures, and was reprinted here. This is but an example of the protection accorded taxpayers by publicity elsewhere. Although there is no question of the integrity of present officials they do not hold office for life and one can tell little about the character of their successors.

The light of publicity should be thrown on all public expenditures by all public bodies in the interest of the public. When printed in newspapers they are on file and available to the public for years to come.

Those Hilhi boys are clicking in football again with two successive victories over the strong St. Helens and Beaverton teams. We hope they can make it three straight with a win over their Cheesemaker rivals at Tillamook Monday. As many as possible should go over from here to give the boys real moral support.

Response Good

Hillsboro businessmen in a secret ballot conducted by the retail trades committee of the chamber of commerce clearly outlined their position as to closing on Armistice Day. The vote was overwhelmingly for closing just as local business has done ever since that great day back in 1918 when the World war was brought to an end with joy to millions of Americans.

In so doing they have generously responded to the request of the American Legion for closing. Legionnaires and others believe that the day should be one of general closing in observance of such an important day in our history. Without question it should be made a national legal holiday to bring such cities as Portland into line. Portland's present attitude reflects no credit to itself.

It is well for us to take a day out once in awhile even not considering the great patriotic significance of the day. The average person goes at too fast a clip in the quest for the dollar any way, and a day's diversion at not too great a speed is beneficial.

County Planning Group Seeks Aid

Washington County Planning Commission, called into session Tuesday night by W. G. Ide, chairman, discussed ways and means of procuring a $25,000 WPA project to clear the channel of the Tualatin river in this county.

Members of the Tualatin Valley Flood Control association were invited to attend. The county court agreed to sponsor the project providing waivers were signed by property owners along the river where work would be done.

The waivers provide for access to the river and the piling and burning of refuse on the banks owned by the various residents. Persons interested took out 25 of the release blanks for signature, Ide said.

Engineers of WPA, however, call attention to the fact that approval in Washington does not mean that work ever will begin on these projects as final decision in allocation of funds is left in the hands of the state administrator in Portland.

Such projects as the administration of funds needed to carry out labor will be given funds and ordered placed on the preferred schedule. In this county, projects so far approved are needed to supply work for the unemployed and it is expected that early approvals will be forthcoming.

damage has been done to fall grain, according to W. F. Cyrus, county agent. Full extent of the damage, if any, cannot be determined immediately. Cyrus said, as a careful examination will be necessary.

However, in a number of fields examined by Cyrus, little or no damage is apparent although it is expected that more damage may have been done to sprouting grain than to that already up and fairly well rooted. There has been little or no heaving, therefore well rooted crops will escape, Cyrus believes.

Some damage has been found in orchards, Cyrus reported, where the freeze seems to have destroyed considerable bud growth, which probably will effect next year's crop.

In potato fields examined by owners, a percentage of the crop has been destroyed, although no definite figures could be given. Cyrus said, in his belief all shallow hills will be found frozen on top.

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

By Robert Ames Bennett
(WNU Service—Copyright by Robert Ames Bennett)

He unbuckled his pack, slung the pack-board on his back, and picked up his rifle and belt-ax. Huxby trailed after him out of camp. They walked in Indian file all the way around to the muskrat swamp. Huxby by with his gaze fixed coldly upon the back of his leader.

At the swamp Garth cut a tote-pole and passed it through the tendons of two hindquarters of moose. The remaining quarter he strapped to his pack-board. He coiled the second lynx skin for Huxby to use as a shoulder pad. Upon it the mining engineer rested his end of the tote-pole.

When they reached the camp Miss Ramill and her father were out gathering wood. At one end of the fire, thick smoke was rising from green sticks and leaves; at the other, thick, pan of sliced muffle was boiling hard. After he and Huxby had lifted the moose quarters upon the rack, Garth brought water in the aluminum pot and doiled down the stove, simmering heat. Miss Ramill had much to learn about the culinary art.

After the meal Garth glanced at the red after-glow of sunset.

"Mr. Ramill, the leanto and blanket are for you and your daughter. Huxby can take the lee side of the fire. I'll keep it going. Turn in whenever you please."

A yawn surprised Lillith Ramill into a moaning laugh. She turned to her swollen-faced father.

"What a howling farce, Vivian! Can you imagine me going to roost at sunset, instead of sunrise?"

Huxby forced a smile and felt at a particular sore cluster of bites on the back of his neck. Mr. Ramill cast a wistful glance towards the leanto.

"I presume, Lillith, you will prefer not to share the hut with me. Perhaps I can manage out here beside the fire, like Vivian."

"No," Garth differed. "You'll sleep under that blanket until you've hardened into shape, and you'll turn in now. It's been a big day for you."

The girl bridled. "How about my wishes—and the proprietaries?"

"We'll leave that to you," Garth replied. "If you consider it improper to share the blanket with your father, you're welcome to sit up and help me grain these moose hides."

Huxby stiffened. "None of your insolence! You'll treat Miss Ramill with utmost respect."

"The lady shall receive from me all the respect that she deserves herself entitled," Garth said. "We'll not make it mutual, all right?"

Lillith Ramill was no less completely outmaneuvered than the engineer. She spoke to her father, "Well, I must say. Dad, if you're letting your order of things around, I refuse to stay up and slave all night. Come on."

He crept after her into the brush leanto. Garth at once set to making more catgut. Huxby had gathered a thin padding of spruce tips and moss at the rear end of the fire and lay down. Like the girl and her father, he soon fell asleep.

After finishing his first task, Garth tended the fire and added water to the simmering muffle stew. As he began graining the hair from the moose hide, he could have stretched out and gone to sleep no less readily than had the cheechacos. On the other hand he was able to keep awake as long as he wished. He scraped and scuffed at the coarse moose hair, the while his ears drank in the voices of the Wild.

By the time the sun glared over the jagged crests on the northeast wall of the valley, Garth had the hair grained from both the sides of the hide. As he started to cut into the latter section, Miss Ramill crawled from the leanto.

She blinked and yawned, straightened her rumpled sports skirt, and sat down to lace her boots. He gave her a friendly good morning.

"Good! You're up!" she scoffed. "I feel like the morning after a party on a flat. Not a drop of anything for a brace; no bath; no clothes or face cream or lotions; no makeup! Not even a cigarette! Yet you have the face to gibe me about it!"

At that, he could not resist giving her the old quip: "
