Let Us Be Thankful

On this Thanksgiving Day we again voice our thanks for the many blessings that we, as Americans, enjoy. We are particularly grateful to Mrs. A. H. Blasing for the very beautiful poem, written for the Argus Thanksgiving issue and appearing in a box on the front page of the main news section.

In this poem, Mrs. Blasing properly brings out the many daily blessings that come to all of us and for which we have much to be thankful. The sentiment and the manner of expression are poetical jewels.

All of us should be thankful that the economic life of this country is on its way to recovery after the serious illness which left so many destitute and in want. We should be grateful that we have leaders of our country who are doing their utmost to give added blessings to the men, women and children of America. We, of Oregon, and particularly the Willamette valley, should be thankful that we live in such a garden-spot and not in the wake of earthquakes, hurricanes and other great disasters.

Let us be thankful that we live, that we love and are loved, for the air we breathe, the health that is ours and for our daily bread.

Lumber, one of Oregon's biggest and most important products, has again proven its worth in a catastrophe. Word comes from Helena, Mont., that wood stood the severe earthquake shocks and proved safe for the people of the stricken city.

That the credit rating of the City of Hillsboro is good is thoroughly indicated in the bids received on recent Hillsboro bond issues. Good business management should always keep it there.

It still isn't too late to make a voluntary Red Cross membership. Give those willing workers a hand by coming in voluntarily. They trudge a lot of weary blocks to solicit people.

What Other Editors Say

Insurance of Bank Deposits

Look at it from any angle you will, it must be admitted that the Roosevelt administration did not err when it insisted that the money deposited in banks be covered by insurance. Bankers themselves will, if you approach them carefully, admit that insurance of deposits has done more than any one other thing to re-establish public confidence in banking and bring out huge sums of money from safety-deposit boxes and tin cans, and gains in deposits of banks the nation over disclose that confidence is being augmented as people come to recognize that deposit insurance is a continuing requirement.

While many depositors were badly hit when the old inefficient banking system collapsed, but few today realize that more than two and a half billion dollars of the people's money is still tied up in the six thousand banks which went into receivership when the depression called for a strict accounting. But it is of even more interest to note that, among banks closed during the last six months of 1934, there were nine, deposits of which were covered by insurance, and in each instance depositors had been paid in full before the end of last year.

Banking in these United States, under the Roosevelt administration, has entered a new era of efficiency and solidarity, and the nation will, in the final analysis, be all the better for it.—Hood River News.

Public Forum

Editor of Argus—A short time ago there seemed to be a misunderstanding as to why the rural fire truck didn't respond to a call. When sending in a call it is very necessary that some definite location or locality that can cover some twenty or thirty miles.

In this particular instance the call came in and the men answered the call to the fire hall and the equipment was ready to leave, but the outside exchange was not able to trace the call to any definite party, so the men returned to their work.

In the past there have been quite a number of calls which might be called "false alarms." As these are country calls it means miles instead of blocks, which is a considerable loss of time to the men responding to the call, and also expense to operate the truck. In order to compensate the men for their loss of time from their regular work, a very reasonable charge has been fixed for this service, as follows:

$10 for the call for truck.
 $3 per hour for two men from time of leaving until return to hall.

This charge will be billed by the city of Hillsboro to party for whom the call was made. So let's pull together.

We are always ready to serve.

 The following orders were issued this week in probate court: Harry M. Jones, Abigail Gilbride, Frederick Mast, E. Quackenbush, Glenn Swallow, Kenneth Wells, Mary Stitt, L. M. and Emma Sparks were granted an injunction by Judge R. Frank Peters Saturday prohibiting the issuance of sheriff's deed to property bought at sheriff's sale by J. A. and Cornelia Peters. Suit to restrain Peters was also filed Saturday.

In his complaint, Sparks alleges that in December, 1933, Peters brought suit to collect on a promissory note for $1,000 and interest and that notice was served that Sparks claimed homestead exemptions on his property consisting of 23 acres.
 July 31, 1934, a judgment was entered against the property and in October an execution of attachment was issued and the property sold by the sheriff. Sparks also alleges that by reason of the fact that the notice of execution was published in a Sherwood newspaper, he was not properly notified of the pending sale. Peters bought the property at the sale for $1,200 while Sparks alleges that its value is $4,000.

Brasch was found about midnight November 20 by Judge and Mrs. Peters on the pavement near Witch Hazel station. Doctors believe that he was suffering from temporary insanity.

Elmer Handley of Beaverton, 39, was bruised Saturday evening when a car driven by Kenneth E. Clark of Yamhill crashed into his bicycle as he was riding along the pavement near Aloha. Clark reported to Sheriff Connell that the bicycle carried no tail light and that he was unable to see Handley because the outlet for their eggs is on the eastern market where they are meeting strong competition. In order for us to successfully compete with eggs from other sources it will be necessary that we pay a great deal of attention to egg quality.

Poultrymen Hear Merits of Layers

The size of the egg being one of the principal factors in this consideration.

As we gradually progress towards stricter standards of egg grading, the more important will be the factor of having birds which possess inherent characteristics for the production of larger eggs. Lunn stated further that high production and small egg size seemed to be rather closely linked and that it takes careful breeding work to separate the two and maintain a profitable balance between quality and quantity of production. The fact that it can be done is very well evidenced by breeding work which is being carried on at the Mt. Hope farm.

In this experiment work a group of birds was selected, 95 per cent of which were laying during the first year of the trial, eggs that averaged less than two ounces apiece or in other words, less than a "24-ounce" egg. During the course of a trial the fiftieth to fiftyninth egg of each bird was selected. After five years of careful selection and breeding, they reduced the number of birds laying less than a two-ounce egg to 28 per cent.

Whereas, the number of birds laying eggs two ounces or heavier increased from five to 72 per cent. This work, according to Professor Lunn, should be convincing evidence that it is both possible and practical to carefully consider egg size in our breeding and selection.

In addition to a breeding work, Professor Lunn gave an interesting account of his trip throughout the poultry centers of the middlewest, east and south and outlined for the poultrymen the operations of the very interesting and large Mt. Hope Experimental farm.
