Editorial
"Is there no voice in the world to come, crying 'New dreams for old'?" For years the creative urge has been suppressed and crushed in the bud. What encouragement has anyone in school to turn out the very best poem, story or essay he is capable of producing? The good grade accompanying such a literary triumph is usually not a sufficient incentive for the busy student. True literature is sure to win its way in the world, giving its author his due honor. The field is already over-crowded, you say? When has the world ever been too full of Edwin Markham, Christopher Morley, Dorothy C. Fishers or Amy Lowell?

The least we could do to promote and develop talent is to form a society or club to encourage amateur literary attempts in the high school and not only to develop talent but to discriminate between it and the mere effervescence of the youthful mind.

Teachers Surprised
Decorative committee of the Girl Reserves surprised the teachers last Tuesday evening with a tea.

Tryouts for operetta were held this week. Delora Smith has moved with her parents to southern California.

Herbert Schneider returned to school during an absence of a week due to chicken pox.

Dear Diary
What a day! Bus broke down (as usual) so I galloped into English fifteen minutes tardy with an innocent conscience. That upset my entire day and ruined all my usefulness. Then, as if that wasn't enough, we had assembly. I never could understand anything the speakers say (maybe its because I sit in the back and catch thirty winks) so it just made me more useless. By the sixth period, I wasn't good for anything (which evidently was no secret since teacher told me so several times). I didn't get that Algebra done either, but who cares! Twenty-four more weeks and I'll be a sophomore—maybe!
