If the directions are not included with the street name, postal employes do not know which of the two street numbers to send that particular piece to, Holznagel de-

Care should be exercised, Holznagel says, in packing fragile articles. Such articles should be packed and crated or boxed, and marked fragile. Glassware, fragile toys or crockery must be packed to prevent the escape of particles or pieces broken in transit.

For those who wish speed in delivery to insure parcels reaching destinations on Christmas day, Holznagel suggests the use of a special delivery stamp.

The usual warning against enclosing written matter in the nature of personal correspondence also is given. This is a violation of postal regulations, Holznagel said. Such messages may be attached to the outside of the package and paid for at regular postal rates but can-not be paid for and enclosed.
