Electric Energy Use Makes Gain
Sharp gains in consumer buying power in this territory are indicated by the establishment of an all-time record in residential consumption of electric energy by customers of the Portland General Electric Co., declares R. R. Easter, Hillsboro division manager.

The new peak in residential consumption follows a month after production for all classes of customers on the Peppo system reached a new high.

"In the month just closed, residential consumers used 9,203,330 kilowatt-hours of energy to operate home appliances and for lighting, an increase of 14 per cent over November, 1934," he said.

"Average revenue per kilowatt-hour sold dropped 5 1/2 per cent, because lower rates apply as customers increase their consumption."

"Largest group user of electric energy continues to be the pulp and paper industry. Consumption by these mills has increased about 25 per cent over 1929."

"Other commercial and industrial use of electricity slumped considerably during the depression. Some lost ground has been regained and the present status of this class of load is about 10 per cent below the 1929 level."
