Editorial About once every year, since the new high school building was erected, some student or teacher has started talk about "improving the assembly room." Not that anything ever has been done, but talk is free. If ever a room needed something done for it, it is our school auditorium. Speakers come and denounce. And denounce their time trying to educate or entertain us. Unless they are blessed with unusually clear speaking voices, their speech dies out in about the tenth or eleventh row. By the time they have finished, and every whispering, so they go away believing us rude and inattentive.
