Nation Turns Again to Washington's Leadership on Constitutional Issues

THE vision that was George Washington's lights the course of American government with a new brilliance on the 204th anniversary of his birth.

At a time in our history when grave constitutional issues once more arise to demand decisions, the political acumen and forethought of the country's first president stand out as cheering beacons.

"The Constitution that is submitted," wrote Washington to a friend in 1787, "is not free from imperfections; but there are as few radical defects in it as could well be expected, considering the heterogeneous mass of which the convention was composed on the diversity of interests which were to be reconciled."

"A constitutional door being opened, for future alterations and amendments, I think it would be wise in the people to adopt what is offered them."

THUS Washington pointed out—two years before adoption of the great document—the utter impossibility of framing a law fundamentally broad enough never to be changed. The door is open for what the future may require, he said in effect.

And today, as many times before in our history, we are considering constitutional changes to meet the tempo of the times.

Speaking to the nation Sept. 17, 1795, as he prepared for retirement, Washington said emphatically:

"The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and alter their constitutions of government."

Then he added the equally vital thought:

"But the Constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government."

While politicians battle over our governing document, George Washington's views on the Constitution remain fresh and significant on the 204th birthday anniversary of the Father of His Country.

principles that apply to the American scene of 1936.

He warned against "irregular opposition" to the acknowledged authority of the Constitution; he stressed the danger of parties dominating the will of the people; he cited the peril of one department of government "usurping" the powers and duties of another; he urged that public credit be cherished "as a very important source of strength and security"; and he espoused the policy of the good neighbor among nations, but with cautious reservations looking toward the avoidance of "foreign entanglements." The Washington neutrality policy seems especially significant today in the light of revelations at the Senate munitions inquiry. The general said:

"The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible."

In the light of these enunciations, then, does the country, on the great leader's birthday, find new direction and inspiration in the vision that was Washington's,

STATE WANTS YOUNG MEN

High school and college men preferred as being able to earn more.

We have a going program that will hold you to the end of your days. Here is the lineup. You have made good in the grades and on up. The taxpayers' money along with the school boards' planning and your own hard work, have fitted you to earn more. The state now asks you to earn, earn, earn in order to spend, spend, spend. And for what?

A lot of it for state dispensed liquor. You are to step up and get a taste of the stuff. May the first glass set you on fire, is their hope. And at the last, a poor broken old wreck, the state will shut you away in an asylum or penitentiary.

Parents, are you sure that the victim will be the boy or girl next door and not your own? Property owners, are you sure the liquor demons will lighten the taxes? Teachers, why educate a generation to become just scrap-heap stuff?

Stop, look, listen, you parents, taxpayers, and school men! Follow the lead of the state of Mississippi. Down there, every county that late-ly voted, has outlawed the liquor traffic. Then turn and look at Kansas. She recently went dry by 90,000 majority. Now fix your eye on Chicago. Seventy per cent of her voting districts have now gone into the dry column.

"Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not," said our Lord. Lets move ahead and deliver them from DRINK-DESPAIR and DEATH. Old John Barleycorn holding his head high just now out here. Old John adopted by the state and even wrapped in the stars and stripes, as it were. And yet the same old death-dealing cobra after all—George N. Taylor, Beaverton.—Paid adv.
