Whack on Head Helped Develop This Man's Art

When James Ingram's father broke a violin over his head many years ago he evidently made James conscious that there were violins, for James makes instruments now which have something of a local reputation. His father also made violins.

"Just a hobby," James points out, but conversation with the man brings one to the conclusion that study of his art and practice in production of violins has brought Ingram a nearly inexhaustible fund of knowledge concerning the lore of old masters and the finer points in manufacture.

By trade, Ingram is a sawfiler, which makes a person wonder what relationship there is between filing saws in lumber camp and the creation of fine musical instruments that even master violinists might well be proud to cuddle under their chin.

Ingram, himself, is a modest sort of fellow and not eager to talk about his art. He is 54 years old, born near Harrisburg and raised near Farmington, where he stayed until he was old enough to go to the logging camps. He spent 19 years among the redwoods of California, engaged in the prosaic occupation of filing saws, listening to the ear-searing screech of a file across dull, steel teeth.

During this time he began studying and manufacturing violins, and has produced in the neighborhood of 20. He has on hand several which have not been sold, all produced in his shop at the little home where he lives with his mother on the corner of Ebbert avenue and Jackson street in the Garden Tract.

The violins are modeled after the products of Stradivari, a famous violin maker of Italy who lived during the 17th century. This model, he believes, gives the best tones of all.

Maple, hand worked to a thinness, forms the backs and sides of his instruments, while the sound board is made from spruce or pine. In two instruments now on hand, the sound board is of silver fir found near Timber. Two instruments a year is about his limit now, although he has made four a year.

The instruments, when there is sale, bring from $50 to $150 each. He tells of one instrument made by him in California for which the owner received an offer of $500.

In addition to the manufacture of instruments, Ingram has been called on several times to restore damaged violins. In one instance the violin had been crushed. By patching the sound board, he was able to repair the instrument without destroying its tone.

One of his instruments now is in the hands of Merwin Whitmore, who appeared on the Legion Amateur program in Hillsboro March 11. Mr. Whitmore has been playing the violin for some time and is high in praise for the tone of the instrument.

In addition to making violins, Ingram also is manufacturing archery bows for which he is receiving about $15 each. With a little more reputation and practice, he believes, he will be able to get a better price. The bows are made from yew wood which must be of fine grain, straight and clear of knots. The best yew wood, Ingram says, comes from the higher altitudes of the mountains, where the wood grows with a closer grain.

O. J. Hales of Juneau, Alaska, spent the week-end at the home of his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. M. Wick, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. McClure and Miss Flora Wick also spent the week-end at the M. Wick home.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bittman and daughter Mary Lou, and Mrs. Cash of Portland were guests of the last of the week of Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Bergen.

Merle Heezen, who spent the winter with Mr. and Mrs. E. Schumacker of near Laurel, has returned to his home at Plankinton, S. D.

JUST A SIMPLE TWIST OF THE WRIST

The faucet is a simple device, yet how important in our daily lives! A twist of the wrist, and all the resources of your water company are available.

Strangely enough, the dictionary says the word faucet is "of uncertain origin," but originally it meant a peg to stop a vent hole. Time reversed the meaning, and now the faucet is the convenient fixture by which you turn on water.
