Chapman Foretells Pension Plan Fall

1200 billion dollars in transactions as declared by the Townsend leaders, but would come from the lesser sum of about 250 billion dollars, which would yield only five billion dollars a year.

Such a tax as is proposed on transactions or turnovers would not be at the rate of two per cent on each transaction, but at the rate of 24 per cent. Industry would not long survive such a tax, Chapman declares.

The turnover tax, he said, would act as a brake on industry while the spending of the money raised by such a tax would not stimulate the velocity of transactions.

All such taxes have been failures because of the refusal of the population and industry to function under them. The most recent example of such tax failure was in France, Chapman pointed out, where the tax was only in effect two weeks and applied only to the last two transactions and not to all of them. The tax failed because the population refused to accept it, he said.

The next income of the nation, Chapman declared, is 50 billion dollars on which the Townsend plan would levy for 24 billion dollars. The 24 billions of the national income would go to about 10 million and would be taken from the incomes of the other 120 million population.

Thus, we see, he said, that about 30 billion dollars would be left to the majority as income which would amount to approximately $25 a month average. How long would these people with families to support stand this, he asked?

Chapman then called attention to the fact that 15 billion dollars of the national income now is required to carry the expense of all branches of government and that a federal tax of five to six billion dollars a year is in the offing to balance the budget.

"There is no possibility of congress ever passing the Townsend plan," Chapman said in closing.

Ed. Schulmerich was chairman of the meeting, introducing the speaker.

First of a series of programs by local business institutions and industries will be given at the next Monday noon luncheon by the Hillsboro Argus, one of the oldest institutions in the city. Following a brief program all will be invited to visit the plant to see and hear something about newspaper work.
