Spring Here—Officially; Weathermen See Trend Toward Cold, Wet Winters

EVERY March 20 the sun travels northward across the celestial equator—thereby officially ending Old Man Winter's reign on this hemisphere for another nine months.

Winter often lingers a while after the deadline, but this year, linger or not, he already has done enough to this country to assure his efforts for the 1935-36 season a big page in weather history. He certifies that "Old Timers" will hark back to this winter in their stories in the next century.

But the weather we have just endured may be only a beginning.

Oldsters who have insisted that winters in the waning years of the 19th century were prevailingly colder than those since 1900 have received, until recently, lusty "baw-haws" from most weathermen. The meteorologists believed that cold winters and warm winters came in no particular order—that the "old-fashioned winter" was a myth.

BUT in the last few years weather observers have inclined toward the theory that mild and severe winters do run in cycles. They see in the record-breaking 1935-36 winter indication that the trend toward warm and dry winters, evident since 1900, has reached its peak and that we may expect lower temperatures and more moisture from now on.

While below-zero temperatures this winter received appropriately cold welcomes all over the country, abundant rain and snowfall which accompanied them were given hearty receptions except where rain and melting snow caused floods, or deep snowdrifts isolated communities.

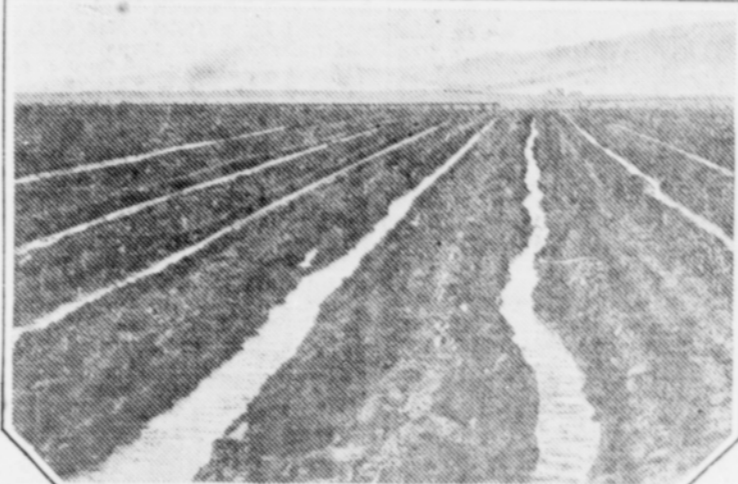

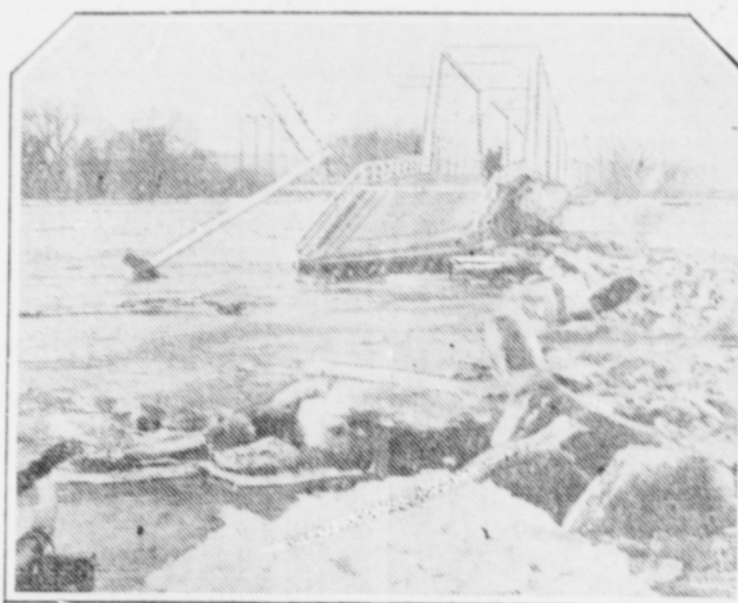

Soil moisture and water for irrigation are more plentiful than in several years. Only one section—extreme western Kansas, western Oklahoma, and eastern Colorado—remains very dry. Dust storms must be expected in this area, unless there is more rain.

ONLY two low temperature records were broken at first-order weather stations in the three months just ending, according to preliminary reports of the United States as a benefit. Tickets may be purchased from all members of the club.

Chapter Meets Tuesday—Tualatin chapter, O. E. S., will hold regular meeting Tuesday evening at the Masonic Temple.

Hugh Brown Injured—Hugh Brown of Cherry Grove is at Smith's hospital receiving treat-

The severe 1935-36 winter brought both disaster and benefits. The upper photo shows an ice jam and flood in the Platte river near Valley, Neb. Two sections of a highway bridge were torn away here when sudden thaws sent a crushing barrage of huge ice cakes down the swollen stream. Other regions received more kindly treatment. Irrigation projects, for example, are better supplied with water than in many years, because of the heavy snows and rains. The irrigated field in the lower photo is near Hanford, Wash.

Weather Bureau, but combined averages for the period make it the coldest on record in many places.

The two low marks were set in North Dakota—coldest state in the Union. They were 59 degrees below zero at Williston, and 46 below at Devil's Lake.

Chicago, St. Louis, and Des Moines were among those cities beating their all-time record low averages.

California, Nevada, and Arizona were the only states to average temperatures higher than normal.

Snowfalls were heaviest in the northern Rocky Mountain area, North Central states, and the east. The south had much more rain than in normal winters.

rooms. Emblem committee has charge of the dinner, and an interesting program of music and stunts is being arranged. Portland members are expected as guests.

Amateur vegetable growers who operate hotbeds and grow early vegetable plants will succeed best if the seedlings in the seed rows are not allowed to become too large for transplanting. If seed is sown broadcast or at the rate of eight to the linear inch the plants will have become sufficiently crowded when they have three leaves at which time they are best shifted. O. S. C. extension circular 251 on growing early vegetable plants is available from the office of the local county agent.
