VALUE OF EGGS IN THE DIET

(By Oregon State Board of Health)

Most housekeepers will welcome the approach of the spring season for it brings within reach many of the foods that have been used sparingly during the winter months. Among these important foods are eggs which from now on will be gradually dropping in price as the supply becomes more plentiful.

Extending the use of eggs is indeed fortifying the value of the diet. Eggs are high in phosphorus and iron and so supplement the diet which is quite apt to be low in these elements. It is largely for the iron that physicians recommend the addition of egg yolk to the diet by the end of the first year and regularly thereafter. Such foods are introduced into the young child's diet cautiously, however, as some children take a dislike to new foods and occasionally cause a digestive disturbance. Whether eggs are actually harmful to such individuals, however, can be easily determined by skin tests by the physician.

Eggs are one of the few foods rich in Vitamin D, another reason why they are introduced early in the child's diet. While nearly all children now are given cod liver oil or some fish liver oil for its vitamin D as a protection against rickets, the value of egg yolk in this regard is not fully appreciated by all mothers. The fact that egg yolks are rich in vitamin D, however, points to the advisability of using them regularly the year round, especially in the winter season when the days are shorter and the ultra violet rays of the sun are thus less available. Because it is these rays of the sun which activate vitamin D in the skin on exposure out of doors, a liberal use of eggs is recommended during this season when children play out of doors a shorter time.

Eggs have an excellent quality protein and are also rich in vitamin A, that growth factor so essential in the child's diet. The yolk of the egg with its fat, phosphorus, iron and vitamin A and D is more valuable than the white which is principally protein and not so essential when milk is also liberally used.

Those qualities of eggs which make them valuable in child nutrition also recommend them for use in cases of anemia and other wasting illnesses. They have been used for this purpose long before vitamins were known or their mineral content fully appreciated. Eggs in addition to milk, vegetables and fruits have now been included in that class as the "protective foods" because they contribute so many of the vitamins and mineral elements essential to health. With the supply of eggs becoming more plentiful and the price more favorable eggs should be used liberally each week. Eggs may well replace meat or fish once or twice a week and at other times enter into all manner of dishes to the benefit of all.

In purchasing eggs it is well to know that the color of the shell has no bearing on the nutritive value of the eggs, though markets in many cities claim a higher price for white or brown eggs according to which sentiment prevails in that district. More is being done than ever before to maintain the quality of eggs. Poultry raisers are focusing and liver oil or making sunlight available to their flock to increase the vitamin D content of the eggs. Eggs are being shipped and handled more carefully and methods of refrigeration are gradually making it possible to maintain the natural freshness of eggs held in storage.

BUSH'S MARKET

EDITORIAL

We wish to express our appreciation of your helping to make last Saturday the greatest day for Hillsboro.

We got the biggest bang out of Safeway's ad in asking their customers to do their buying for them.

One of our competitors said they would pay 15c a dozen for eggs but will pay more if anyone else does.

If it weren't for competitors just what would the value of your produce be?

The old saying is that the dog that barks loudest is the first to howl.

LISTEN IN!
Yours truly,
C. S. BUSH.
