Codling Moth Spray Needed

Extension Specialist Gives Views to Growers

Apple and pear growers in the Willamette valley should apply the first cover spray now for the control of codling moth. The warm weather of the past few days has started the flight of codling moth and eggs have been deposited, according to B. G. Thompson, assistant entomologist of the Oregon experiment station. Under ordinary Willamette valley weather conditions these eggs will hatch in seven or eight days. The spray should be applied before these eggs hatch. Lead arsenate used at the rate of three pounds to 100 gallons of water is the recommended spray in orchards where codling moth is not a serious problem, two pounds of powdered lead arsenate to 100 gallons of water is sufficient to give control.

Calcium arsenate, used at the rate of three pounds to 100 gallons of water, has been used successfully in the Willamette valley for codling moth control. Tests carried on by the entomology department of the Oregon experiment station over the past few years indicate that under Willamette valley conditions calcium arsenate is only slightly less effective than lead arsenate in controlling codling moth.

Thoroughness of application is essential in codling moth control, says County Agent Cyrus. The foliage as well as the entire surface of every apple and pear should be thoroughly covered with the spray solution if worm injury is to be prevented. Special care should be taken in spraying the upper portion of the trees, as more than half of the codling moth eggs are laid in the upper third of the tree.
