DEATH-CELL TO SCAFFOLD Thirteen steps up to the scaffold. The man who stands by as they slip the noose over is Bill King, the prison evangelist. The wardens send for Bill on the days before the execution; you find him much in the death-cell with the condemned men. He has led many to Christ in their last hours.

How does the Lord of the Harvest fit his man for this work? Take Bill for instance. He began as a newsie, selling papers on the streets of Toronto. But he came from Athlone, Ireland; like John McCormick, famous tenor from the same town, he can sing.

Bill's voice put him with Lew Dockstader's Minstrels, a road show, as you old-timers will recall.—See 'em done in black cork, dressed like colored bandies, stepping to the music as they parade down Board street at noon on the big day? So Bill was in the Kerose circuit back in the horse and buggy days. Always to sing Irish ballads. But he could not stand up under the big salary. So came about a partnership with Demon Rum and Old Man Poker. He finally quit the minstrels to give all his time to drink. And then came a prison term. Yes—When this man sits with a condemned lad he is able to say that prison walls are an old story to him also.

Hope faded out of his life and at length, drunk and desperate, he decided to end it all. As he went by the Midnight Mission, there in Los Angeles, something led him to stop and go in. For the first time, he heard the Gospel. Then one on the platform told how God had lifted him from a life of sin.—"If Christ can do this for others, so can He for me," reasoned our man. And he went to the altar and surrendered. So came Bill King, the prison evangelist.

To Make a Long Tale Short

one of your lady acquaintances was being examined for a life insurance policy, and the doctor asked her if there was any insanity in the family? "Yes," she replied, "my husband thinks he's the boss." "Maybe if she WAS THE BOSS she'd tell friend Hubby to look our stock of Used Cars over, and pick out one that they've been talking about buying."
