Age of German City Made Its Greatest Asset Through Plan

(Editor's Note—This is the first of several articles written for this newspaper by Eric W. Allen, dean of the University of Oregon school of journalism, who is now traveling in Europe on a fellowship granted by the Oberlander Trust of the Karl Shurz memorial foundation. Dean Allen was also named special representative of the Oregon state planning board.)

BY ERIC W. ALLEN
Dean of the University of Oregon School of Journalism

SOEST, Westphalia, Germany—Zigzagging slowly across France and Germany, we drove recently into the most charming little city and ever dreamt about a medieval walled town straight out of the pictures of Maxfield Parrish or Howard Pyle, with all the added charm of the Kate Greenaway pastorals of our childhood.

It was Soest, of which we had never heard. Furthermore, it seemed to me the most practical and well-regulated city I had ever entered. It shone with fresh paint and business prosperity, artistic good taste and commercial enterprise, and was spreading out beyond the walls and old moat into lovely new suburbs. Its population is about that of Eugene.

I said to myself, this is no accident. Brains and organizing ability have been at work here. For, if I smell the results of city and regional planning of the most enlightened sort, I will find out who put this thing through and perhaps the folks back in Oregon who believe progress should be planned for and brought to pass will be interested in the story.

From Dr. Shulte-Brauchs, the principal of the modern language high school for boys, we learned the story of the remarkable man who is principally responsible for making the little city of Soest a show place of which all Germany is now rightfully proud.

The man who made Soest what it is today is not even a resident of the town. He holds no office, he wields no power. Yet he is so loved and respected that his word has the force of law, and no man in Soest may even paint his house unless Pastor Clarenbach approves the color. Much less can he build, or tear down, or alter a building, or repaint an advertising sign until he has ascertained that Pastor Clarenbach believes that the projected change will represent the true spirit of Soest.

Pastor Clarenbach is a descendant of a line of Lutheran pastors, but he plays a bigger part in Westphalia than that of country clergyman of Germany. He also holds the office of superintendent for the entire district in the Lutheran church, and is the man behind the throne in the far larger city of Soest where he cannot even vote.

It was nearly thirty-four years ago that Pastor Clarenbach got the idea that Soest could, by careful planning, convert its greatest liability into its greatest asset. The town was very old. It was founded 2000 years ago. Much of it was run down. The narrow, crooked streets were mud. The place was badly lighted. It had no good hotel. Nineteenth century progress had brought in more or less commercial enterprise and shops and factories were located in the wrong places, originally beautiful old-world structures were plastered over with blatant, tasteless advertising, and the place looked back upon the point of view of the modern inhabitant of Soest today, was a mess.

Pastor Clarenbach organized a little group to study the program of Soest. He brought in experts of all kinds to advise. By intensive study a plan was finally formulated, but nobody wanted it. They called it theoretical and impractical. But the idea clear to an enlightened few, what could be done that would make Soest a famous and prosperous city. It was to work out a program in which the most up-to-date modernization should be done in hand with a scrupulous salvaging and restoration of the beauties of the Middle Ages. Its age was to be made Soest's asset instead of its liability.

It was centered finally in Pastor Clarenbach. The story is too long to tell in detail. The bed of the moat was cleared and made into charming gardens. Prizes were offered for businessmen who conducted their advertising most successfully in the spirit of Soest. Incidentally, Pastor Clarenbach is pro-advertising and not anti-advertising. Pride was aroused in the householder for the antiquity of his ancient dwelling. The old coats of arms were redigged, old mottoes furnished and made to appear as they were when Luther came to Soest, streets were made practical for modern traffic in such a way that the medieval beauty of the place was enhanced rather than lessened.

All over Germany now are planning associations that have the same name as Pastor Clarenbach's little group, Heimatpflegevereine, and these are associated with many other powerful groups. The pastor himself is at the head of the movement for all Westphalia—and Westphalia represents the most advanced regional planning in Germany, if not the world, and Soest's most successful plan fully and successfully carried out.

The very business men who were so actively spotting what was left of Soest thirty years ago are now the strongest supporters of Pastor Clarenbach, because the money is jingling in their pockets that proves that civic beauty has greater possibilities of private profit than letting every man carry out his own sweet will with his own property. The remarkable thing is that every bit of this was carried out without the slightest compulsion. The only force used was moral suasion and public opinion.

Now even the great motor speedways that are being built in every direction across Germany are so laid out as to respect the ideas for which Father Clarenbach fought almost in vain for fifteen years and for which he still fought on with increasing success for the last ten ideas for which people in Oregon, like Robert W. Sawyer and Mrs. Jessie M. Honeyman are now fighting an uphill battle such as pastor Clarenbach was fighting from a decade to thirty years ago.

Crews Start Work on Banks Highway

Mess place and Mrs. Myrtle Crep's house.

The Leonard Construction company has rented Ed Clark's garage, which will be used as a repair shop, headquarters and first sign station. Clark will continue to operate his service station.

Mr. Ayers and family moved Sunday from Tillamook into the Frank Rinck house.

Five power shovels now are in operation on the Wilson river highway with the addition of another this week. Two power shovels are in use on the Wolf creek road, tearing out dirt for fills and making channel changes in the creek.

On the Wilson, the night shift has been resumed, keeping the heavy machinery as busy as possible bringing in right-of-way to grade. Meanwhile crews continue with the pioneer road over the summit and the clearing and grubbing of right-of-way. K. E. Tillotson, resident engineer for WPA, reported Wednesday.

Logging Companies Close Camps Again

Recently settled labor troubles in the Consolidated Interstate and Connacher logging companies' camps near Glenwood, flamed anew Tuesday in morning, according to word reaching Hillsboro from the camps.

According to the reports, unconfirmed as to the company officials, a minor dispute over wages paid the "steel gang" on railway construction, brought the trouble into the open again.

When the men refused to go to work in the morning, officials of the companies are said to have ordered the camps closed with the result that most of the men were out of the camps by night.

The companies are engaged in salvaging timber in the burned-over area of the Tillamook fire of 1933.
