Annual Christmas Music Festival Set for Tonight

Young people of high school and college age, of the clubs affiliated in the Hillsboro Christian Council, will again conduct the annual Christmas Eve music festival in the Venetian theatre tonight (Thursday), beginning at 11:30. Adults of this community are invited to join. The theatre doors will be open to the public at 11.

The musical program will be divided into two parts of one-half hour each, separated by the singing of "I Came Upon the Midnight Clear" exactly at the midnight hour, the traditional time of the birth of the Christ. The first part of the program will have to do with music promising the Redeemer, while the latter part will be composed of songs of thanks that the saviour was born. As has been the custom in previous years, the audience will join in singing "Silent Night" at the close of the program. In the soft light of only the Christmas tree.

After the musical program, the young people of the clubs will carol through the Hillsboro streets, and then will join in a breakfast. The Protestant group immediately after the caroling and the Catholic group after the first mass. Pilgrim House, council headquarters, will remain open throughout the night for all those who care to wait for the coming of Christmas dawn, and the church services of Christmas day.
