

Death Strikes at Veterans of State Senate

(By A. L. Lindbeck)

Death struck twice in the senate during the week to remove two veterans who have been identified with the Oregon legislature for many years. Frank Davey, 86-year-old assistant sergeant-at-arms, died at a Salem hospital Wednesday night after suffering a sudden attack of illness only the day before. Davey, for many years identified with newspapers in various parts of the state, served in the house of representatives in the sessions of 1905 and 1907, being speaker of the house during the latter term. John P. Hunt, veteran chief clerk of the senate, died in a Portland hospital Thursday after an illness of ten days. Hunt, who was 58 years of age, had been a senator-employee since 1907, first as assistant to the chief clerk, and then as chief clerk since 1921.

Reports current about the legislature that W. L. Gossin, secretary to the governor, would be appointed to the full chairmanship of the parole board if that office is created by this session, were denied by both Gossin and Governor Martin this week. Gossin is ex-officio a member of the present parole board.

Chancellor Hunter's fight for more money for the state system of higher education has resulted in an increase of approximately $212,000 over the budget recommendations submitted by Governor Martin. The ways and means committee agreed to a plan of raising a $400,000 appropriation and stabilization of the millage revenues for higher education at the 1930 level effective with 1928. This does not provide an additional revenue. The increased allowance for higher education comes out of the general fund.

Not even Governor Martin himself would be able to recognize in the revamped mining board bill the "child" which he sent to the legislature two weeks ago. The bill as worked out by the mining committees of the house and senate carries an appropriation of $50,000 a year as the governor had requested, but $20,000 of this is earmarked for use in grubstaking prospectors. Another 10,000 is earmarked for assaying activities and only $20,000 is available for expenses of the proposed board.

$75 for repairs in 12 years

Here's proof of quality - - -

Battle Ground, Wash. Gentlemen:

About twelve years ago we purchased a "Caterpillar" tractor and it has been in use on our place ever since. The total repair cost has been under $75.00 and the track pins and bushings have been in excellent shape, very little wear being noticeable.

No telling how many hours the machine has covered, but it is always ready to go and has done our work with complete satisfaction.

Yours very truly,
W. C. JOHNSON.

What could be more convincing than statements like the above from people who have had years of experience with "CATERPILLARS."

They perform more economically, are more dependable and last longer than other makes of tractors because every detail of design and construction is based upon actual field needs.
