It's the Same Old Tale

Ross, Antrim Tell Part in Lawmaking

protected, while the workingman and the merchants had no certification. He explained that the certificates were first liens against the lumber and so prevented the laborer from attaching this product for back wages with the consequence loss to the merchant when the laborer was unable to pay his bills.

Was His Duty

Antrim declared that he felt it his duty to look after the interests of the old people, and therefore voted for a congressional hearing on the Townsend plan. The peculiar part of this action was, he explained, that it passed the house by a small majority and then when a pension bill came before the house at the last minute, many switched their votes for this legislation so that they could point out to their voters that they were for the old age pension.

When Chapman, last Monday, discussed a statement that the representative refused to vote for the Hood River strike control bill, he failed to tell all that Antrim said on the floor of the house, the Aloha man declared.

The strike bill, Antrim explained, was based on an English law passed in 1871, which was designed, with the thought in mind, that the nobility of that country looked down upon all of the people and had incorporated this principle in its wording. He closed his talk with the declaration that he was opposed to special privilege and always would be.

Ross Speaks

Senator Ross gave a long review of all the legislation, which affected Washington county to any great extent, and opened his talk by declaring that he was opposed to such addresses as given by C. C. Chapman in the chamber of commerce a week ago.

There is too much lack of respect for constituted authority, he said, and intimated that such talks as that by Chapman bred disrespect for the legislature. Of the newspapers, he declared that the reports indicated that pinball and slot machines were all of importance that was happening. However, he declared that the press, as a whole, is fair, and endeavors to give a fair report of what takes place.

Only one bill especially affected this county, he declared, and this was the law regulating the office hours in the court house, keeping the offices open at noon each day and closing all offices at 1 p. m. on Saturday after June.

Vote More Control

Several measures having to do with milk control added to the protection of farmers in this county, he declared, while a bill to repeal the present law, was defeated.

Among the acts designated by Ross as beneficial to this county, was compulsory grading of milk and cream and which will make the state one of the leaders in the nation in this matter.

An appropriation for agricultural research was praised by Ross as a forward step in taking up work which was left incomplete when the depression struck. Other beneficial bills to farmers included a nut grading act; an act establishing inspection of seeds and licensing of seed dealers, while the horticultural laws were strengthened in such a manner as to be of benefit to this county.

Repeal Fee

Of interest to farmers, he said was the repeal of the 30-cent charge for filing gasoline tax refund claims, while the law making additional beds available at The Dalles state tuberculosis hospital, and in Portland Medical center, was of general interest.

Oregon auto dealers as well as those in this county, Ross said, benefited by the used car anti-dumping act, which prevents caravanning dealers from selling cars into the state from outside.

Ross said that he did not vote for the bill which provided more lands for the state capitol because he felt that this movement was contrary to the wishes of the special legislative session which provided for the new capitol, and would not be popular with the people.

Receipts Eliminated

One bill passed through his own efforts, he said, was the law which eliminates the necessity of milk haulers issuing receipts for individual shipments of milk picked up on routes.

Additional funds for the counties from the state highway fund, was passed, he said, but the requests of the city were refused in this division. He praised George McGee, city manager of Hillsboro, for his efforts in behalf of the League of Oregon Cities, and said that he thought the movement was in the right direction.

Among the bills which failed, were those dealing with stream pollution, Ross remarked. This, he said, was a vital problem and should have had consideration at this session. However, he said he believed national legislation would follow which might be of some assistance.

Of his attempt to limit speed of automobiles by application of a control device, he remarked that he still was in the belief that something should be done to cut the increasing toll of human life through accidents. Texas, he said, nearly passed a similar bill this year.

You can tell what Louise Crutzen thinks of Bob S.—the family dog is named after him!

Spring track training is beginning—stiffness and more limbering anticipated by us.

To a certain masculine one of Miss McDonald's (not the one who had a farm) science classes: That blonde gal whom you've been watching is none other than Virginia Havens.

Alma Eslinger once said (at a party) that she practically sustained life from pickles—hence the little figure—but don't believe anything you hear—we saw her guzzling a chocolate (or was it a strawberry?) soda one day—which reminds us—did you know that she's quite an athlete? Oh yes—she has a letterman's sweater—everything.

A prevailing mystery of three weeks' duration is who is the tall blonde who has a shiny car in which he drives Dot Barr around? (Plz note the use of prepositions in that last sentence.)

Some of Miss Nex' classes would appreciate some new dictation. Continued next week—Whozit.
