New S. P. Booklet Advertises Oregon
As a part of a campaign to attract tourists to this section of the Pacific coast, the Southern Pacific company has just published an elaborate 24-page booklet, "How to See the Pacific Northwest."

Printed in colors, the booklet features large illustrations and descriptive material covering Crater Lake, Oregon Caves, Columbia River highway and Mt. Hood, Rainier National park and the beach resorts, fishing, golfing skiing and other attractions of Oregon, Washington, British Columbia and Alaska.

Many thousands of copies of the publication are being given national distribution by Southern Pacific agents located in principal cities of the east, middlewest and south, according to J. A. Gorman, general passenger agent, Portland, who says that every indication points to unusually heavy travel to the Pacific coast this year. The new folder ties in with an advertising campaign Southern Pacific is conducting in national magazines and eastern newspapers to attract vacation travel to the Pacific coast.
