Stroke Fatal to Ed Schulmerich

also organized one of the bank corporation, which consisted of four county banks.

The senator was the last of five well known Schulmerich brothers, including himself; Herman, postmaster here under the last Cleveland administration; William, prominent dairyman; George W., merchant and farmer, and Joseph, merchant and farmer at Banks.

Changes Occupation

By 1900 Schulmerich again decided that his destiny was not too closely coupled with the farm, so he moved to Hillsboro and entered the mercantile business in the firm of Bailey, Tongue and Schulmerich.

This was his first venture in the business world, and later sold to the firm of Connell, Cornelius and Downs. Previous to his venture in Hillsboro, he established and operated one of the first creameries in Oregon on his farm.

Having established himself in the business world of Hillsboro, he was one of the organizers of the Hillsboro Commercial bank in 1904, and the Cornelius State bank, which later was sold to S. Sholes.

Banks Consolidated

In 1927, the Hillsboro National bank affiliated with the Hillsboro Commercial bank through Schulmerich's efforts and became the Commercial National bank of today.

It was at this time that the late E. I. Kuratl, who died suddenly June 5, and Schulmerich became partners in one of the strongest banking institutions in the northwest during the period of bank failures, which began in 1929.

In addition to the varied business interests, Schulmerich also found time to take an active part in public affairs. For a time he took charge of the water and light department of Hillsboro, during the period when that institution was in financial difficulties. Records disclose that under his management, the department was placed in successful operation.

As a law-maker, Schulmerich served four years each in the house and senate of the Oregon Legislature, where he took an aggressive part in passage of laws. Of his work at Salem he always declared that: "In my opinion my greatest achievement was my bill consolidating the schools of higher education in the state."

During recent years he had staunchly defended the republican party and took an active part in the last presidential campaign. He was outspoken and defended his convictions in all matters. Although denied much of his education, he was a tireless reader and kept himself well informed on business and public affairs.

Traffic Code Foreseen Here

Active campaign to make Hillsboro "safety conscious" was promised Tuesday night through action taken by the city council in endorsing a proposed safety campaign sponsored by Mrs. C. E. Wells, councilwoman.

Mrs. Wells was named chairman of a committee to study safety problems in the city and prepare plans and necessary ordinances to bring the present traffic rules to date and into full force.

In bringing her proposals to the fore, Mrs. Wells declared that, apparently, enforcement of existing ordinances was one of the prime factors in the campaign. She related the outcome of a recent meeting with businessmen and the discussion of traffic regulations.

She proposes, as one measure, a pledge to be signed by all business owners that machines owned by employers, or employees, shall be parked outside the business zone during the day.

TICK FEVER IMMUNIZATION (By State Board of Health)

Thirty-two cases and five deaths is the 1936 report for tick fever in Oregon. Two cases were reported last week.

All persons obliged to work and live in a tick-infested district should be immunized against this serious infection.

Following is a summary of results of ten years' work in immunization by the U. S. Public Health Service.

"The degree and duration of protection vary with the vaccinated individual and with the degree of virulence of an infecting strain of spotted fever virus."

"The average person vaccinated in the spring retains a considerable degree of immunity during at least the remainder of that year. This degree of immunity is usually sufficient to afford full protection against the relatively very mild strains of spotted fever, but is apparently progressively less effective as the virus virulence is increased. The degree of protection against the highly fatal type is sufficient to ameliorate marked-

Employers Urged to Setup Records

Oregon employers are urged by James E. Peebles, Portland manager of the Social Security board, to arrange their records immediately to comply with requirements of the Social Security act.

Every employer in commerce, industry or professional service having one or more employees, regardless of whether the employee works on a temporary, part-time or permanent basis, will be required to file an information return with the collector of internal revenue in July, Peebles explained.

"No special form of bookkeeping is required" said Peebles, "but the employer's records must show the social security account number of each person under 65 years of age whom he has employed at any time since January 1, 1937. Wages or salaries paid to each employe between January 1 and June 30, inclusive, must also appear on the employer's records."
