County grand jurors will meet at the court house this morning (Thursday) and District Attorney G. Russell Morgan said Wednesday on whether Judge R. Frank Peters is here to take a number of pleas. be somewhat simplified because views in hearings. the federal government can draw on the experience of eight states which already have working minimum wage laws of their

The federal wage and hour bill is similar to the New York law, and was in fact written by Ben Cohen, self effacing New Deal brain truster, who drafted the New York law. The New York law applies only to women and minors but the federal bill embraces both men and women.

A limited number of wage earners will be affected by the Black-Connery bill, if it becomes law. It is estimated there are about 3,000,000 persons in the industries to be covered who are earning less than 40 cents an hour, and there are about 6,000,-000 persons who are working more than 40 hours a week.

There will be no minimum wage regulation to protect the man whose income is more than $1200 a year, and local service industries and small businesses will be left to the states to regu-

Mrs. Elinore M. Herrick, New York regional director of the National Labor Relations Board, thinks the yardstick for wages which will be used by the federal board will be those wages which a majority in any speci-fied industry would and could support voluntarily.

Labor laws such as that proposed by Black and Connery are designed to control a sub-standard minority, and eliminate substandard practices.

This enables those employers who voluntarily subscribe to decent wage standards to maintain and improve those standards. Mrs. Herrick explained that it has been the experience of the New York board that it cannot set a wage higher than the wage in effect in the upper quarter of

> THE New York board rarely has found it necessary to chastise an employer with the full penalties of $500 fine and/or

Mrs. Herrick testified before the Black-Connery Committee: "For years we have had a system of departmental hearings where a persistent violator is called in, and his whole record is gone over with him. He is reasoned with, warned and then advised to go and sin no more. It is only if he again appears as an incorrigible that the full penalties are invoked. This procedure has worked so well in New York that it has been found necessary to prosecute but very

As an example of what the New York board considers just cause for prosecution, Mrs. Herrick recalled the case of Joe Tipaldo, a laundryman, who figured in the historic New York minimum wage case which was appealed to the Supreme Court. Evidence against Tipaldo was that he "falsified his books, forced the girls to kickback their pay, and finally forged signatures to pay checks so they would look regular to the inspector.'

There has been opposition to the creation of a federal wage and hours board on the ground that it would exercise autocratic power. Mrs. Herrick's answer to that is that in her experience the National Labor Relations Board as a parent body has exercised a restraining influence on field agents and made them prove their cases before allowing them to proceed against any employer.

Restraint is imposed on the board itself by the necessity of making reports to Congress from which it draws its life blood in
