An interesting lesson can be learned from the technique of professional racing drivers who, instead of keeping at full speed until they are well into the turn and then putting on the brakes, apply their brakes when approaching the turn, enter it at reduced speed and then accelerate as they come out again on the straightaway, notes the Oregon State Motor association.

First Automobiles Make Loop Trip

(Continued from page 1) has been behind the project all of the time and I am only sorry that it could not have done more."

Third speaker was Loyal M. Graham, Forest Grove attorney, who has been designated as "father of the Wilson River highway" because of his long activity to make it a reality. He told how he had worked in the state legislature for the route, and how three bills had been drawn, and each defeated, before the employment emergency made it possible for relief funds to do the construction.

Out of the Wilson river proposal, he related, came the plan for the Wolf creek road. "I have now traveled over the entire length of the Wolf creek route," he told his audience, "and I am in a position, I believe, to make some comparisons. I can see no reason why there should be any jealousy, or misunderstandings over the two routes. They are different. Wolf creek is distinctly a pleasure road designed to give the pleasure seekers of Portland a short, swift route to the ocean."

On the other hand, Graham declared, the Wilson River highway ties together two great communities; dairying in Tillamook county and the grain and hay raisers of Washington county. He closed by urging close cooperation between advocates of the two routes toward their completion.

Both B. F. Irvine and Marshall N. Dana of the Oregon Journal, told of the great advantages to the communities which will be so closely connected by the routes.

Last speaker was E. J. Griffith, who declared that the big fire, while a misfortune, became the most potent argument for construction of the highways. Six times, he said, projects for their construction were submitted by WPA to Washington, and each time they were rejected because the engineers declared the cost per mile was too high.

Offers to Resign When the last rejection was made, he said, he sent in his resignation as administrator for Oregon with the notation that he could not see where he would be of any service. He also reviewed the whole argument for the roads, placing particular emphasis on the economic necessity of driving roads into the mountains to permit the salvage of the burned timber. This, he said, seemed to be the clinching argument. The projects were granted. "However," he concluded, "the credit for these roads belongs to all of you."

On the loop trip were Griffith, J. C. Albright, deputy administrator of WPA, Floyd Bilyeu, field representative of WPA, W. H. Marsh, Vern Bright of Aloha, and F. C. McIntosh, all of the WPA administration.
