Armistice Address Given by Bynon

ly and forever free of any more foreign wars was made by Bynon in his talk. "If ideals are worth dying for, they are also worth fighting for," he said. "Our ideals would be a new era in human relations. Right, not might, would rule."

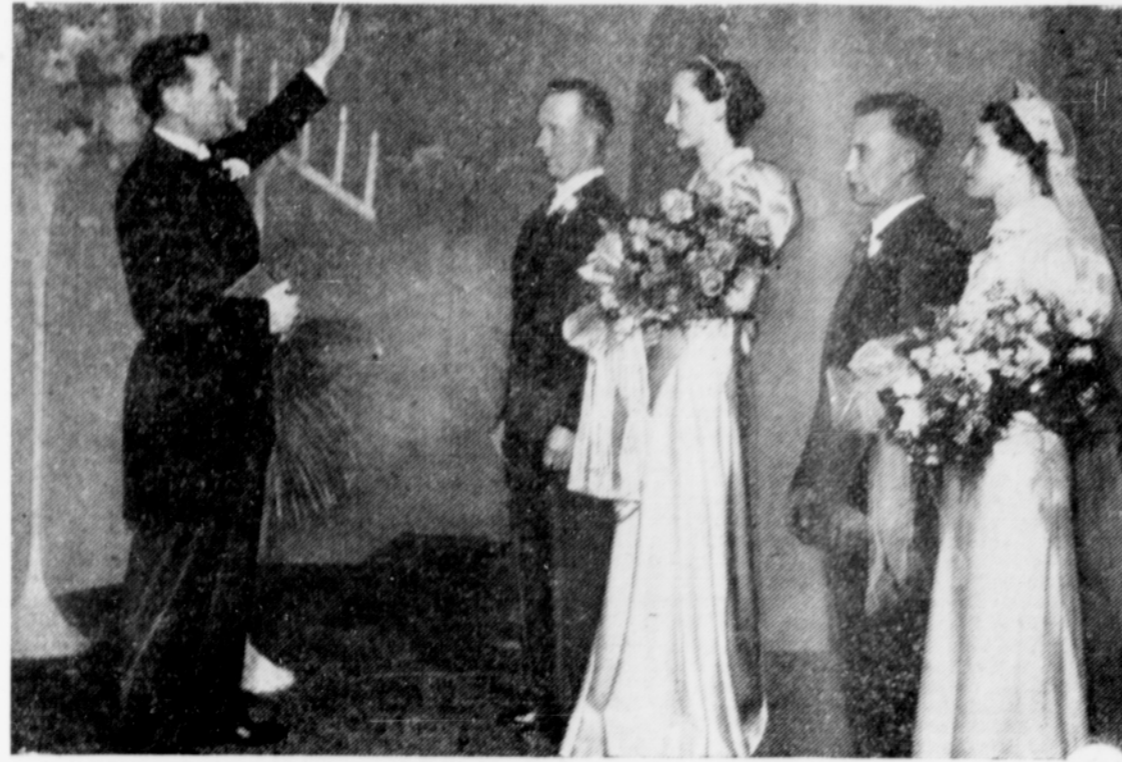

"Now we must continue to work for peace by our efforts here at home," he said. "We must preserve America as a cradle of liberty for all mankind. We have finished this business of interfering in foreign quarrels—19 years ago we were done with it."

The American Legion's three-point peace program, adopted at its recent New York convention, was cited as the example to be followed. The plan includes:
1. A universal draft act in time of war, with equal duties and services from all and no war profits.
2. A strong army and navy as a bulwark for peace, but not to be used for aggression.
3. A proper neutrality policy, vigorously enforced.

Eliminate Profits of War
"The American Legion seeks to have the next congress pass this law," Bynon asserted. "It aims for the elimination of greed and profit motives in war. Only aggression against us can again cause us to enter war, and a strong defense maintained through a properly equipped army and navy will insure our position of peace. Neutrality is our surest safeguard against war. We can keep our soldiers out of war on the battle front by keeping our merchants at home off the economic front."

"It is our sacred obligation to carry on the fight to preserve peace for our country. 'On Armistice day of 1918, all humanity cried out 'Fin la guerre'—the end of war. Today we must all join in the work of promoting peace with a

Farm Demand Termed Heavy

to have that before the end of the year," he said. Seven thousand acres of land have been purchased and divided into 107 farms and six of which are as yet listed as "undeveloped" farms. Individual farm acreage runs from 30 to a minimum of 113 on the largest farms. Total number of farms is considerably less than the 200 called for on the originally prepared budget for this area, Tucker said, but slashes in appropriations necessitated by flood relief and other causes was declaratory of the situation. The rest are listed as "non-modern," although all are equipped with electricity for lighting purposes.

Government Costs Cheaper
Proof that at least one government agency carries on its work at a lower cost than private contractors was one of the points stressed by Tucker with relation to the construction division of the resettlement administration. "We have often been asked," he said, "just why the resettlement form administration doesn't try to save 25 per cent of its building costs by turning the work over to private contractors. Last spring we tried just that, and found that the private contractors' costs ran from 15 to 35 per cent higher than when erection was handled by our construction division."

Applicants for the farms numbered over 10,000, Tucker said, with all coming from one of two groups, including those residents of submarginal farms which were purchased by the government, and rural rehabilitation clients who came recommended by their county agents. All clients must be 50 years of age or less and in good physical condition. The case of each one is reviewed by the resettlement supervisor and then checked by a selection committee. If that portion of the test is passed, the farmer and his family go through a thorough physical examination. The successful client is allowed to make his selection from the list of remaining available farms, and occupies it as soon as the buildings are completed.

Loans Found Necessary
It is necessary in many cases to make subsistence or equipment loans to these clients," Tucker continued. "We have made loans from $600 to as much as $1800, which are repayable to the government at five per cent interest over a period not to exceed five years. A lease purchase program of five years allows the completion of his first year. A payment of $43.23 on each $1000 of the farm's value is payable each year, which is usually less than cash rent previously paid by many of the farmers." The total purchase price cannot be paid off until the 40-year period is up, although the purchaser may make all payments with the exception of the final one as soon as he wishes.

Tucker was introduced at the meeting by Victor Madsen, resettlement supervisor. A report was made by Mayor J. H. Garrett on the work of the community relations committee, which proposes a plan whereby each chamber member will be called upon during the coming year to bring at least one guest to one of the luncheons or evening banquets.

Warehouse, Onion Crop Lost in Fire

A fire of undetermined origin destroyed the brick onion house and the entire 1937 onion crop, on the J. E. Reeves place south of Cornelius early Friday morning, rendering the building a total loss. Total loss was placed at $10,000.

Fire broke out between 5 and 6 p. m. Friday, and was first noticed by neighbors, who reported it to Frank Miller, tenant. Flames apparently broke out in the north end of the building, which was the first section to collapse, it was reported. A tractor and truck parked near the building were saved, but the onion crop harvested less than a month ago was entirely lost. Only a small amount of insurance was carried on the building, it was said, since the brick warehouse was thought to be nearly fireproof.

Hail Diogenes! Honestest Man in Hillsboro

If Diogenes is still searching for his honest man, he can now throw away his flickering lantern and come to Hillsboro. An incident last Saturday in one of the city's busy markets revealed the presence of one outstandingly honest person.

A customer, arms piled high with packages of vegetables and other sundry bundles, paid his bill and started for his car. One of the clerks ran in pursuit, asking if the man had lost his purse. The answer was "No."

"Please," said the clerk, "would you mind looking?" The gentleman was still inclined to think not, but dropped his bundles and investigated. The purse—and more than one-hundred dollars in it—was gone.

"Could this be it?" asked the clerk. "Thanks," said the gentleman, taking his billfold and driving off.

"Just to think," commented a bystander, "he had to practically force it on him."

'37 Census Shows Gains in County

Figures on the annual R. L. Polk & Co. census released last week show large gains in the three Washington county cities included in the report.

Hillsboro's 1937 population, the census shows, is 3,900, or a gain of 561 over the 3,339 reported in the 1930 government census. Forest Grove's reported gain was even higher, with 641 additional people bringing the 1930 figure of 1,859 up to 2,500 for the current year. Beaverton's figures showed 1,465 for 1937, as against 1,138 for seven years ago.

The Polk census is taken annually in Portland, and shows a gain of 25,872 new citizens for the state's metropolis since the 1930 census. The out-of-town census was conducted by the Polk officials at the request of the Portland Chamber of Commerce through the city and town officials, and showed the rest of the state keeping up with Portland in population increase. Average population increase in urban Oregon since 1930 was given as 13.9 per cent.

Skin Disease Cases Lessening

Prevalence of skin diseases among students at Hillsboro union high school is considerably less than in previous years, according to Reece Hathorn, assistant football coach.

The policy of isolation adopted for those suffering from impetigo, boils, or other skin irritations is said to have had beneficial results in halting spread of these diseases. Increased co-operation with the work of Miss Corinne Pennington, school nurse, is responsible for much of the noted improvement, it was said.
