

Fruit Growing Outlook Better for Future

A general upward trend in fruit production during the next five to 10 years with some probable strengthening in consumer purchasing power compared with the average of the past several years, is the conclusion to be gained from the most recent farm market outlook report of the O. S. C. extension service.

Slight downward trends in apple and prune production were exceptions, but these are offset by probable increases in supplies of foreign apples and prunes in competition with American exports of these fruits. Citrus fruits show a sharp uptrend.

Nut Production Up
The report also takes up the nut situation and outlook, as well as small fruits and nursery and greenhouse products. In regard to the outlook, data in the circular show that the combined production of walnuts, pecans, filberts and almonds will probably average in excess of 100,000 tons during the next five years, against about 90,000 from 1932 to 1936. Imports of cashew nuts have mounted from virtually nothing 10 years ago until nearly one-fifth all crop is consumed in this country last year were cashews.

The report, which contains much data in graphic and statistical form, is available without cost from county agricultural agents in all Oregon counties where the production of these crops is important commercially. Altogether, according to the circular, such crops account for nearly one-fifth of all cash farm income from crop and animal production. They represent an even greater share of the income from out-of-state sales.

Dairy Problems Discussed at Meet

that date I. R. Jones of the dairy department will discuss dairy cattle management problems. This will include such questions as calf raising, heifer raising, pasture management, and other related topics. B. T. Sims will discuss cattle diseases with particular emphasis on mastitis. Development of improved pastures will be dealt with by S. B. Hill, dairyman of Multnomah county.

At the meeting last Wednesday, Brandt called attention to the necessity of the cows getting plenty of water. Quite frequently cows fail to get sufficient water during the winter time, especially during cold weather. At such times, the drinking water is frequently so cold that the animals will refuse to drink more than a mere minimum. Warming drinking water during the winter time, especially during cold weather, corrects this. This means heavier milk production, usually less consumption of feed providing the animals are being fed according to their needs.

Breeding Problems Talked
Proven sires came in for considerable mention by Morse. Such a sire, he pointed out, is, according to the U. S. department of agriculture's definition, an animal which has at least five daughters with records of production. This, according to Morse, is not necessarily an adequate measure of a sire's value. A record of production of all the bull's daughters is more dependable, and a desirable sire is one whose daughters can consistently show an improvement in production when it is compared to that of their respective dams. One high producing animal two or three years back in a pedigree means very little in the inheritance of that animal.

Maintaining a healthy herd is another primary factor in a successful breeding program. Oregon has cleaned up tuberculosis of dairy cows and considerable progress is being made in controlling Bang's disease. The federal testing program which provides an indemnity for reacting cattle is still in effect. Morse pointed out that dairymen, even though they have had their cattle previously tested under the federal program, can still take advantage of it by signing another agreement being tested again. As long as the federal program is in effect, the obligation of the dairymen in regard to the disposal of reacting cattle is identical regardless of whether he is tested under the state program or under provisions of the federal agreement. Cooperation of the dairymen in taking advantage of the opportunity to get this testing done under the federal program would cut down on the expenditure of county funds necessary to carry on the Bang's control program.

Livestock Survey Being Conducted

A survey begun two weeks ago by the bureau of agricultural economics of the U. S. department of agriculture seeks to find the number of livestock on farms throughout the state.

December livestock inquiry," it was stated, "is one of our most important surveys. We desire data from farmers who do not keep much livestock, as well as from farmers who are primarily livestock producers."

Special report blanks have been sent out to crop and livestock respondents of the country from the office of the agricultural statistician in the U. S. court house in Portland, asking for the number of hogs, horses, mules, cattle and other information, such as total acres of all land, amount of home butchering, livestock production of recent months and listings of milk and beef cows. The first report on hog production is expected to be released just before Christmas.

County Townsend Rally on Sunday

A county rally of Townsend clubs will be held Sunday at 2 p. m. in the Grange hall, Gordon Ware, national representative for Oregon, will be the principal speaker. He will first hand information concerning the movement throughout the nation and come with an up-to-the-minute message. Business and professional men are invited to hear him. Henry Young, county representative of congressional district No. 7, is making the arrangements for this meeting at which a large number of Townsends and friends are expected.

At the local Townsend club meeting Monday plans were made for a turkey dinner for the membership January 10, it being the semi-annual election of officers. C. C. Bannister was elected official delegate and J. A. Hockersmith, alternate delegate, to the district one convention at Corvallis January 9. Next meeting is December 27.

oftentimes the most competent physician is unable to make a definite diagnosis without the confirmation of a blood test. When this particular stage of the disease has subsided, there is nothing that is diagnostic except the Wassermann or similar test of the blood or spinal fluid. Following this manifestation of the disease there is usually a quiescent period which may even last for years and during which time there are no symptoms whatsoever which would cause an infected individual to go to a physician for medical care. During this smoldering period of the disease the individual may at any time become infectious to his or her marital partner. The disease may be passed along to the offspring, causing premature death and deformities in many kinds. No other single disease known to mankind produces so many miscarriages, and deaths among infants. There is one way to prevent this. The blood test is a definite procedure which will detect syphilis so that treatment can be instituted and infectiousness prevented. Provided the test is made early and proper treatment instituted, the disease may be cured.

An important problem in the control of this disease is to detect it early. The blood test prior to marriage will detect a great many early cases of syphilis because over 65 per cent of marriages occur in the Oregon to thirty age period, which is the age when syphilis is most frequently contracted.

There is no doubt if the voters of this state approve the new marriage law that in the years to come rate and will prevent the birth of children congenitally infected with this deforming disease. The passage of this splendid act will be a step forward in our civilization.

SAFEGUARDING MARRIAGE
(By State Board of Health)
If a measure initiated by the last legislature is approved by the voters of Oregon, both marital partners will be required to have a blood test for syphilis upon applying for a marriage license. Up to the present time it has been found that about one blood test out of every one hundred examinations routinely made is found distinctly positive, indicating that syphilis is present.

The majority of individuals found to be infected with syphilis by routine tests had no knowledge of their having such disease. There are several reasons for this. One, of course, is the fact that the public in general is not acquainted with the early manifestations of syphilis, and another reason is that this disease has such an insidious onset and does not immediately cause impaired health to any great extent. The disease is not like pneumonia or typhoid fever, which acute illnesses are unmistakable. On the contrary, syphilis smolders away in the body until some years have elapsed and then some vital organ is irreparably damaged or in the meantime the disease has passed to marital partner and offspring.

The early symptoms of syphilis are often very mild and in many instances are not recognized. Also, one of the early stages of the disease may be confused with other diseases which are accompanied by a rash or eruption. In these cases gift suggestions during the past week.

Noted in the crowds pouring out of the theatre at the opening performance were more than a few "kids" with traces of gray in their hair. One of these "kids" commented later, "I couldn't help getting in there. I stopped as I was walking past, just as by the crowd. Once I got in, I just didn't want to leave until the show was finished." The kindly Santa Claus officiated in bestowing free gifts of candy upon the youngsters.

Crowds and more crowds, seemed the keynote Saturday, with one nearly-disappointed visitor ruefully reporting "For a while the sidewalks were so crowded I couldn't get into the stores I wanted to visit." Although the holiday spirit was definitely in the air, the large number of shoppers was quickly handled by the commodious Hillsboro stores, that have adopted the Yule season motto of "Shop in leisure at Hillsboro this year."

Ralph Wilson headed the committee of six which canvassed the merchants for support of the "party day." Others included Harry Bates, Tom Bailey, Rev. Henry Young, Chief of Police O. O. Freeman and Anthony Abts.

Thanks of the sponsoring group were extended to Boy Scout troops 216, 226 and 227 for excellent work in handling the crowds at the theatre.
