New Farm Act to Continue 1936 Provisos

The new AAA farm act which became effective February 16 when President Roosevelt signed what is known as the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, continues and strengthens the provisions of the soil conservation and domestic allotment act under which the AAA has been operating since the spring of 1936, according to N. E. Dodd, Haines, chairman of the state AAA committee.

Plans previously made for putting into operation the 1938 agricultural conservation program will be carried out as originally intended. The new bill adds to the present program such features as establishment of marketing quotas when necessary as an additional means of stabilizing market supplies of cotton, tobacco, rice, wheat and corn, and provides for crop loans, crop insurance and other additional features.

Information Coming
The state college extension service, working with the state AAA committee, will get out detailed information to the farmers concerning the new act just as rapidly as possible, says F. L. Ballard, vice-director of extension. As in the past, the policy of the extension service is to inform the people fully regarding agricultural programs provided by congress and help them reap all the advantages possible from the application of such laws.

One of the most important features of the new bill provides for the establishment of marketing quotas to be used in years of large surpluses, although only with the approval, by a two-thirds vote, of the farmers affected. In years when the total supply of any of the five commodities reaches a level considerably above the normal requirements for domestic and export markets, farmers who produce the crop commercially will vote whether or not to place a quota on the crop. If the vote is favorable, quotas are put in effect for all commercial producers of the crop.

Those who sponsor the bill say that the marketing quotas should give the nation adequate supplies of the five crops with an ample reserve in each case. What is in only quota crop grown in Oregon, and it is believed unlikely that it will be effected in 1938.

Old Documents Recall Story of Cornelius' Founder

Three old documents were displayed this week by R. P. Shaw, present mayor of Hillsboro. The three papers are now Shaw's property, but were originally issued by his grandfather, Colonel Thomas R. Cornelius.

One, a large gray document, is Cornelius' commission as a colonel in the First Regiment of Oregon Mounted Volunteers, and was signed at Salem, Oregon Territory, on January 9, 1856, by Governor George L. Curry, last governor of Oregon before it became a state in 1859.

Colonel Thomas R. Cornelius, born in Missouri in 1827, was one of a family of ten children. With the rest of his family he crossed the plains to Oregon in 1845, during which trip the party suffered many hardships after being thrown off the trail by a foehardly guide. The family reached the Willamette valley after a grueling journey across country and settled on what later took their name and became known as Cornelius place. The father and several of his adult children took up land claims in the vicinity. Thomas R. Cornelius took up a claim near his father's place when he attained his majority and held it for more than half a century.

Cornelius Given Grant
In 1846, when news of the Whitman massacre came through to Oregon, Cornelius enlisted as a private in the Oregon company, furnishing his own horse and equipment and participating in five battles of the Indian war, afterwards being promoted to first sergeant. In 1848 he joined the gold rush to California and was successful there, frequently turning out as much as $300 worth of gold a day. After a year in the mines he returned to Oregon and married Miss Florentine Wilkes, who had come across the plains with her family in the same emigrant train as the Cornelius family.

The second of the papers shown by Shaw is a large, yellowed document certifying a land donation of 640 acres near Cornelius to Thomas R. Cornelius and his wife, Florentine Cornelius. It was given in June 13, 1873, while Ulysses S. Grant was president. A large red seal over two faded blue ribbons completes the affair. A slip attached to the document is dated 9:30 a. m. August 19, 1892, and certifies that T. S. Wheatner, recorder of conveyances for Washington county, had recorded said instrument of land grant.

Later Named Colonel

Cornelius enlisted and was made captain of Company D, Washington county volunteers, at the outbreak of the Rogue River Indian war in 1855. This command fought several battles with the Indians, during which Cornelius made a splendid record. On the resignation of Colonel Nesmith, Captain Cornelius was named colonel of the regiment. His commission was dated January 9, 1856, and did not arrive until late in February, but he assumed command of the regiment December 21, 1855. This is the commission which Mr. Shaw loaned for exhibition this week in the Argus window. It was accompanied by orders to make ready for a campaign against Indians in the Snake river and Palouse country, in what was known as the Black Hawk war. A two-page fragment of this letter of instructions is included in the papers shown.

At the close of the campaign after several battles with the Indians, the 28-year-old Colonel Cornelius returned to his farm. In 1856 he was chosen to represent Washington county in the territorial legislature, being elected on the republican ticket. He was re-elected each succeeding term for 20 years, during which period he was twice chosen president of the senate. He was in office as a legislator when Oregon became a state on February 14, 1859.

Commissioned by Lincoln
At the outbreak of the Civil war, he was commissioned by President Lincoln to raise a company of volunteer cavalry in Oregon, and expected to be assigned to service at the front. But since all regular army officers had been recalled from Oregon, he was assigned to service on the coast, his principal duty being to keep the Indians under control. In 1862, while stationed at Walla Walla, he resigned and once more returned to his farm. His first wife died in 1864 and in 1866 he was married to Miss Missouri Alice Smith, a teacher at the old Tualatin Academy, who was the daughter of Rev. William E. Smith, a circuit rider for the Methodist church in the early days of Washington county. She survived her husband by almost 40 years and died January 30 of this year at her home in Cornelius, having reached the age of 91 years.

Miller McPherson Buried Monday

C. Miller McPherson, former Hillsboro resident who died in Reno, Nevada, February 22, was buried in the I. O. O. F. cemetery here following funeral services Monday afternoon at Delmona & Sewell chapel with Rev. H. A. Deck officiating.
