

Well Known State Officer Dies Sunday

Eight months' battling against the overwhelming odds of a serious gunshot injury complicated by a subsequent infection ended Sunday morning for Roy Pyle, Oregon state policeman, shot by a crazed Central Oregon rancher November 7, 1937.

Pyle died at Good Samaritan hospital in Portland. His body was taken in charge by Donelson & Sewell of Hillsboro and later sent to Bend, where he made his home after leaving Hillsboro. Funeral services were held Wednesday from the Bend funeral parlors, with interment following in the John Day cemetery at John Day.

Surviving is his wife, Mrs. Maude Pyle of Bend. He was 51 years old at the time of his death and a native of Missouri.

Once Stationed Here
Pyle was well known in Hillsboro and Washington county. He was stationed here shortly after the Oregon state police department was organized by Major General Smedley D. Butler during the administration of the late Governor Julius L. Meier.

Injuries which led to his death were received when he and Sergeant Arthur Tuck went to the farm of Gust Olson near Terrebonne early last November to investigate a murder rumor. They found Olson had murdered his partner. When discovered he fired at them with a shotgun, wounding Pyle in the face and head. He then barricaded himself in a chicken house and opened fire on both officers, and shortly after committed suicide.

Several months ago, a delicate brain operation was performed on Pyle, but later a brain abscess developed.

He also survived by his mother, Mrs. Rebecca June Pyle, and a brother, Lee Pyle, both of De Soto, Mo.

Gales Creek Man Injured in Crash

Ed Keller of Gales Creek was sent to Jones hospital Wednesday with a badly cut left arm as the result of an automobile collision on the Tualatin Valley highway near Witch Hazel at 6:30.

Deputy Sheriff Hallie Ireland, who investigated, reported that Keller's car, which was traveling east, crossed the yellow line of the highway and struck the car of Ben Yantti. Hillsboro, who was coming west toward Hillsboro, Yantti's automobile was sent

Flames Destroy Roy Grain Crop

Flames, thought to have been started by a spark from a tractor manifold, swept across the main portion of a 124-acre wheat field on the J. M. Vanderzanden farm near Roy last Wednesday, destroying the partially-harvested crop.

Sparks or ignited chaff from the tractor pulling a combine harvester on the field were blamed for starting the fire. Harvesting of grain got under way in the Roy country the latter part of last week, and Vanderzanden had moved his combine onto the field just shortly before. The combine crew, which included Jim Armstrong and his father, noticed smoke curling out of a draw in the northwest corner of the field. Steady breeze from the west fanned the flames to a raging fire which swept across the field. Fast work with a tractor permitted plowing of a fire-belt across the field after the combine had been drawn to safety.

More than half the field was burned over before the flames were controlled, and most of the crop including several sacks of the mixed wheat and barley scattered over the field, was destroyed. Some of the threshed grain was saved, however, and there was a possibility of some salvage on the small unburned portion of the field, although it had been damaged by tramping of the force of more than 60 firefighters which gathered to control the blaze.

Damage to the crop was estimated at the neighborhood of $500. It was covered by insurance, Vanderzanden stated.

Peterson Barn Burns
Fire destroyed a large barn on the Carl Peterson farm near Hillsboro Monday afternoon. The fire did not break out until the combine crew had moved to another field, but when fanned by a north-westerly wind, swept across a short strip of dry straw, destroyed the barn in which some hauled hay was stored, and then raged in a southeasterly direction across the harvested field in the direction of the Washington county home.

The fire was finally extinguished after reaching the corner of the field. State Policeman Walter Hadfield, who investigated, attributed the start of the fire to the combine, probably from a spark from the tractor exhaust. The fire destroyed part of the harvested grain, crop lying in sacks scattered across the field, but most of the sacks were dragged to safety and saved from the flames.

Closest fire to Washington county was that in the High Heaven country near McMinnville in Yamhill county. Cecil Kyle, Forest Grove state fire warden for the district, reported that the fire was well under control early this week.

Governor Bans Forest Permits

While forest fires blazed throughout many sections of Oregon, and no break apparent in hazardous fire weather, Governor Charles H. Martin this week issued a proclamation suspending all burning permits and privileges in Oregon state forests.

Possibility of closing down mill and logging operations in the event weather conditions do not improve was foreseen by F. W. Ferguson, state forester. Many logging camps of the state have already shut down because of hazards.

Zumwalt Boy Hurt By Flying Steel

Louis Zumwalt, 11-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Zumwalt of Hillsboro, was in a serious condition as the result of an internal injury sustained Monday afternoon, according to Dr. D. C. McDonald, who attended the youth.

The young Zumwalt boy was into the ditch on the north side of the highway. Keller's car turned completely around and ended up on the south ditch. The left side of the Yantti machine was wrecked.

Keller was taken to Jones hospital, and Yantti was treated for minor cuts on the arm. Percy Hines of Forest Grove and Bud Smith were passengers in the Keller car and Alvin and Arthur Mohr of Hillsboro were riding with Yantti, but none of them was injured, Ireland stated.

Aloha-Huber Community News

(By C. E. Barker)
We ate lunch at 9:30 at Sulphur Springs near Crater Lake. At about 8:00 feet up the other boys of our troop gave out, but I stuck to it, reaching the top at about 11 o'clock.

At the same time we reached the top from the south side, the Legionnaires reached it from the north side. We enjoyed the grand view for about an hour and a half. The air was clear, the sun warm and the wind at the top, cold. Coming down was easy, we just slid and skied. It took seven and one-half hours to go up but only 45 minutes to come down. We came down so fast I got a headache, or maybe it was the sulphur fumes from the crater.

Walter Klatt Home
The sea rover, Walter Klatt, arriving here Thursday from a six months' voyage on the Henry D. Whiton, Union Sulphur company line. He was detained in the Gorgias hospital, Ancon, Panama, for a week. He praises the fine treatment he received there and the good fellowship he enjoyed in that military hospital. He says it rains in Panama about every 45 minutes in a manner that means business. Next day, the best word in the dictionary is ardent enough to express it. On the last lap home his company placed him as a first-class passenger on the motor ship Tiwan house for Los Angeles, thence by rail to Portland. He will be home for about two months, then try to get a freighter for China, New Zealand or Australia. He brought back a real Panama hat in three colors handmade by an Indian, for which he paid the trifling sum of 25 cents. Real money goes a long way down there. Walter says that if you have five dollars in loose change about you, you can buy out a whole store.
