

Health Unit Works At Full Speed During Summer

Washington county's health unit, still less than two years old, has worked at full speed throughout the summer, continuing the crowded schedule which began shortly after the first of the year, according to health authorities.

At present more than 700 numbers, each of which represents one or more in a single family, are on file in the health office at the county court house. Each one indicates that one or more members of the family has been or is being treated by the health unit staff. This week saw the county hospital loaded to capacity as health office workers attempted to keep pace with the demand by staying on the job on a "dawn-to-dusk" schedule.
