

Forest Grove Youth is State FFA Speaker

Octav Lemcke, Forest Grove youth, Tuesday was advanced into semi-final competition in the Future Farmers of America public speaking contest when he was chosen as Oregon's representative in the western district embracing 11 states. Winner in this district to be chosen next month, will be advanced to the national contest in Kansas City next fall.

Selection of the Forest Grove boy as this state's foremost FFA speaker was made by unanimous vote of judges who heard him speak on "The Effect of Machinery on Agriculture" at a Rotary club luncheon meeting in Portland. Other finalists who delivered 10-minute talks at the luncheon were Manning Fowler of Gresham and Lloyd Fowler of The Dalles.

Clam-Bake Dinner Draws Big Crowd

The "Clam-Bake" dinner given by the Knights of Pythias lodge Monday night as a benefit to the softball team, was a great success about 250 persons being served—and these waiters served like experienced K. P.s, too. A. R. Bradley was the principal chef, and other K. P.s on duty were Bill Dierdorff, Jack Wismer, Tom Litteral, Tom Shuck, Bob Eschde, Ray Saylor, Bill Gifford, Fred Sewell, Bill Ziegler, and Jim Peppard, who also acted on the reception and dance committee.

Look for the name Caterpillar

Behind the name "Caterpillar" is more than 25 years' experience in building track-type tractors of highest quality and workmanship. This long experience, plus the many extra value features built into these machines, accounts in a great measure for "Caterpillar" leadership in the track-type tractor field.

John Carleton Myers, Roving War Correspondent, Returns To Peace of Reedville Home

The idyllic peace of his mother's Reedville farm residence is somewhat of a contrasting chapter in the life of John Carleton Myers, Sino-Japanese war correspondent, who temporarily abandoned his journalistic career in North China recently to visit with the home folks and "to write that book that's been hanging fire for so long."

Quite some difference is the low of dairy herds to the thunder of cannon and cries of yellow-skinned soldiers along the North China front where Myers traveled for five months with the advancing Nippon army. Employed by the Japanese government as official cameraman and war correspondent in that sector, the "local boy" collected first hand knowledge of war conditions there and learned much of the actual inside story of Japan's conquest on the Asiatic mainland.

Learned Oriental Tongues

Equipped with a working knowledge of both Chinese and Japanese, he talked with "buck private" soldiers and high ranking military officials, diplomats and peasants, China war lords and peace-loving citizens. Among numerous "big stories" covered by the roving reporter was the coronation of Henry Pu-yi Kang-te, emperor of Manchukuo.

During seven years of journalistic experience in China and Japan, he was employed as a publicity director by the Dollar Steamship lines, marine editor of the China press in Shanghai and managing editor of the Manchurian Daily News.

Mother Also Journalist

Born and schooled in Portland, Myers became widely acquainted in Washington county through relatives and associates here. His mother, Mrs. Lois P. Meyers, feature writer for one of the Portland dailies, keeps a home at Reedville although residing much of the time in Portland.

His long career as a newspaper man has included reporter jobs with the old Portland News and Portland Telegram, the San Francisco Bulletin and the Sacramento Union. He first invaded the Far East field in 1922.

New Field Opened

His acquaintances in the Orient included many of the world-famous correspondents whose daily dispatches are read by millions. Carl Crow, author of "Four Hundred Million Customers," he knew as an advertising man in Shanghai and Myers' personal attitude toward the war is inclined to be pro-Japanese. The Chinese peoples in districts where he has had occasion to talk with them are welcoming Japanese troops, he says, as protectors against the tyrannical rule of Chi-
