

Life and Work Of Mr. Tongue Given Praise

The following eulogy of E. B. Tongue, written by W. G. Hare of the local bar who opposed him in more cases than any other attorney was read at the funeral services in the Congregational church Tuesday afternoon by Rev. H. A. Deck.

"His official conduct was conscientious, fearless and able. He possessed a deep respect for the law and the duty of a law-enforcing officer. He measured up to every obligation required of him by his official oath. He was generally considered by both bench and bar as the most able prosecuting attorney of the state. He was a thorough student of the law and participated in many of the most important cases presented to the Oregon courts. As an advocate, few were his equal, and none his superior."

"His fidelity to the cause of his clients was his watchword. No personal interest ever caused him to swerve from the pathway of duty to those who placed their confidences in his keeping. The humblest cause entrusted to his care was never neglected. The righteousness of his cause was the thing of supreme importance. Financial reward for his services was of a secondary consideration. He measured up to the highest ideals of his profession."

"His force and vigor in court were oftentimes but a cloak which concealed from casual observers the true tenderness of his nature. Never did he gloat over a defeated adversary. One least of his convictions of law violators. Many times his eyes were dimmed by tears of pity following convictions which his devotion to duty caused him to urge."

"His outstanding traits were loyalty to his friends and devotion to his family. No personal sacrifice was too great for him to place upon the altar of friendship. No act of personal kindness toward him failed to inspire his gratitude. Justly proud of his name, he yielded to no man in devotion to home and family."

"He loved his native Hillsboro and its people. His life was one of service. Personal attacks, common to an active life, were brushed aside and forgotten. His path in life was not a pathway of ease. He contacted the stern realities of life. His great ability, indomitable courage and tireless energy overcame the obstacles of life and caused his endeavors to be crowned with success."

"We live in deeds, not years; In thoughts, not breaths; In feelings, not figures on a dial; He who most lives, who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

her of acres required to produce a certain amount of food value, it is shown that sugar beets, cane sugar, potatoes and corn meal are high in value per acreage and correspondingly low in acreage requirement.

Beef High in Land Use

Milk, lettuce and spinach require more land for the same food value production, and beef requires many times the acreage of the first group the chart showed.

By decreasing the amount of land raising sugar and starch crops to feed the ill-fed one-third and by increasing the acreage devoted to the products lower in food value, a more balanced diet for the nation's underfed would be developed at the same time surplus land was being saturated.

In European countries where the crop acreage per capita is smaller, the problem is reversed, Potter stated. There, the question is how to get more food value from the limited crop acreage. Their answer lies in producing more of the high food value crops—wheat, corn, potatoes and related foods.

Cyrus Talks Briefly

William F. Cyrus, Washington county agent, introduced the main speaker and followed with a short talk restricted to this county's readjustment along the lines advocated in Potter's discussions. Growth of certain crop productions here and decrease in wheat acreage, he said, has been the result of economic gain seen by the farmers and not through any tendency to co-operate with a national farm program. The line of economic gain will naturally be attracted to the market need, however, and the end will ultimately be achieved, he predicted.

A number of county farmers, guests of chamber members at the agricultural meeting, were introduced.
