

Bus Buzzers Decrease Rate Of Accidents

Earl Snell, secretary of state, calls attention to the following item from the publication "The Safe Driver":

"Some time ago the National Transportation company of New York City installed a rear buzzer signal on every vehicle in its taxi-cab fleet.

"Officials hoped the buzzer would prevent backing up accidents, which had become far too numerous. It did. The buzzer attracted attention when the cabs backed up.

"Backing up accidents dropped 30 per cent.

"Because a backing vehicle usually travels slowly, drivers are apt to minimize the hazards of traveling in reverse.

"Evanston, Illinois, had a splendid record of 301 days without a traffic fatality. It was broken late in 1938 when a woman was killed by a truck backing into a private driveway.

"In New York state last September eight men were struck and killed by automobiles in industrial accidents, four of which were being backed up.

"It is so easy to get into trouble when you're backing up. The victim often is unaware of the vehicle or becomes caught between it and a wall or loading platform."

"The importance of traffic safety education in our schools is clearly demonstrated by figures supplied recently by the National Safety Council to Earl Snell, secretary of state. This report, Mr. Snell states, shows that about 5,000 American high schools teach regular courses in traffic safety. In some school systems, the traffic safety course must be mastered before the student may graduate.

"About 2,400,000 boys and girls reach the driving age every year and each year, as more schools teach traffic safety, a larger percentage of this number begin their driving experience better equipped to do a safe job of it.

"During the last five years the number of bicycle-motor vehicle deaths doubled.

"During the same period the number of bicycles approximately doubled."

"Will 1939 continue to reverse this death trend?

"Let's make up our minds early this year to be as patient and careful as possible with the thousands of bike riders who will swell the streets and highways this spring and summer."
