Check Artist Case Continued

The state's case against Aaron Weismuller, who was turned over to Washington county authorities two weeks ago by Portland police on a check charge, was further continued in circuit court this week to allow more time for investigation. Weismuller appeared before Judge R. Frank Peters shortly after his arrest and entered a plea of guilty to a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.

Decrees Granted

Two circuit court decrees for plaintiffs were issued during the week by Judge R. Frank Peters. They were in the case of Charlotte M. Gault and W. H. Gault vs. E. G. Franklin and E. M. Franklin, and the case of Effie Duncan vs. M. F. Duncan, Agnes Duncan and Inez L. Duncan. A judgment was granted in the suit of C. V. Bennett vs. Ray Winters.

Forged Check Follows Prowl

All the necessary implements for an escapade in forgery were taken by the hoodlum who entered the home of W. E. Barr northwest of Cornelius on the morning of July 1. The entire house was ransacked but the only articles taken were a fountain pen, a blank check and two canceled checks bearing Mr. Barr's signature. Later the same day, according to a report in the sheriff's office, a forged check for $12.10 was cashed at the Commercial National bank in Hillsboro. Entrance to the house was apparently gained by opening the back door night lock with a key.

Orange Juice Retains Vitamin C All Night

Orange juice held over night for use at breakfast may not taste quite as good as that freshly made but it will have just as much vitamin C content, says Lucy A. Case, nutrition specialist of the O. S. C. extension service. In reviewing an experiment made by the U. S. bureau of home economics, Miss Case points out that orange juice loses only about 10 per cent of its vitamin C content while stored 24 hours in a refrigerator. After the first day of storage, there is a general loss of this vitamin, known scientifically as ascorbic acid. For the experiment, oranges were treated as they commonly are in the home. The juice was extracted on a glass reamer, the seeds removed with a wire strainer, and the juice stored in loosely covered containers in a refrigerator. Although oranges and other citrus vitamins and certain minerals, it is for their vitamin C that they are especially valued by nutritionists. This, the most easily destroyed of all the vitamins, is one in which diets are often low. It is needed to store very little of it. Those who choose to get their vitamin C from oranges and grapefruit, plentiful on the market for supply, may count on getting a day's supply of it from half of a medium-sized grapefruit or one large juicy orange. Supplies of oranges and grapefruit this year have been the largest ever produced in this country. For this reason, the secretary of agriculture has designated both of these fruits as surplus farm commodities. Under the 1939 federal crop insurance program, 163,000 wheat farmers insured a production of 73,000, 900 bushels by paying approximately 7,000,000 bushels into the insurance reserve.
