

Amendment to Social Security Act Repeals Tax Exemption For Employes 65 and Over

The Social Security act, as now being applied in conformity with amendments made effective on January 1 of this year, repeals the former tax-exemption of employes who have attained the age of 65 years, according to a bulletin received here this week from J. W. Maloney, collector of internal revenue at Portland.

As a result of this provision, employers are now required to deduct from wages paid to employes over age sixty-five for services performed by them on and after August 10, 1939, which are not only the one per cent employes' tax on those wages but also back employes' tax at the same rate on all taxable wages paid to such employes for services performed by them from January 1, 1939, through August 9, 1939, both dates inclusive.

Employer Liable
The employer is personally liable for all such employes' tax even though he does not collect it from the employes with one exception provided in the amendment. That exception applies only in the case of employes' tax on wages paid for services performed prior to August 10, 1939, by employes over age sixty-five, which is not collected from the employes, and only then if the employer does not have under his control on or after November 8, 1939, wages earned at any time by the employes.

It should be noted that the exception mentioned applies only to the employer's liability for the employes' tax and does not extend to his liability for the employes' tax imposed under the act. The employer is thus liable in any event for the employes' tax not only on the wages paid to each employe over age sixty-five for services performed in his employ on and after August 10, 1939, but also on wages paid to any such employe for services performed in his employ for any length of time during the period August 1, 1939, through August 9, 1939, both dates inclusive, irrespective of the fact that the employe may have since resigned or been discharged.

Details regarding the adjustments may be secured from J. W. Maloney, 210 Custom House, Portland.

Jim Wells Comments On Vacation Trip

Here are some comments heard from Jim Wells, Hillsboro merchant, highlighting his and Mrs. Wells' vacation trip to California and the San Francisco fair from which they returned Tuesday night.

"We can't afford living in California more than two days at a stretch."

"I spent 40 cents to get across the bridge, another dollar to drive onto Treasure Island and another 30 cents to park."

"California is a good place to visit if you have relatives there."

"The Golden Gate exposition is well worth seeing. It's better than the Chicago fair of 1933 was."

"The Wells left here September 11, stopped at Lakeview for a trip through the logging country and saw the huge trucks which were fitted at North Plains in action."
