Grass Clippings

Argus Roving Reporter

Friday the thirteenth should have been an unlucky day for Marie Manning according to superstition but she reports that the day went smoothly and without disaster. Business was good. So here again is proof there is no jinx to the combination of Friday and thirteenth. Marie opened her street-car eating place, Manning's "720" at Tenth and Baseline just thirteen months ago on Friday, the thirteenth.

With women's fascination for old glass what it is, it was not surprising that a stemmed, covered glass sauce bowl that centered Zola Morgan's buffet was second only to the Morgans new house in interest at the Business and Professional Women's club tea Saturday afternoon. The bowl was a wedding gift to Mr. Morgan's parents about fifty years ago.

The Morgan home has many new features, the newest and most intriguing perhaps is the glass or mirror in the front door. Apparently the glass is a mirror but when lights are right it is possible to see through, without being seen.

A daguerreotype and an autograph album, each 100 years old, were brought to the office by Mrs. Fred H. Caldwell. The daguerreotype has inscribed sections of mother-of-pearl and no doubt was very expensive.

The album belonged to Charrill D. Fulton, mother of the late Mrs. J. T. Lucas of Buxton. It has beautifully written poetry and acrostics, and much fine creative work. The penmanship is good, and very interesting. Charrill Fulton lived at Fort Covington, New York. The last page with a hand painted rose has this bit: "May thy virtues bloom like the rose, and memory yield a fragrance as sweet."

"Am I entitled to a cook book?" is the daily inquiry at the Argus office. Mrs. Elizabeth Ritter of Hillsboro route 1, said she had been a subscriber for 27 years, having subscribed the twelfth day of the twelfth month of 1912.
