A list of the late books included the following:

"Play by Kaufman and Hart, 'The Man Who Came to Dinner.' Funniest play of the year, soon to be played in Portland, a caricature of Alexander Woolcott portraying the sharp tongue of the town crier.

"Easter Party" by Stephen Leacock, "Too Much College" or "Education Eating Up Life." This also is a humorous book. Though in a lighter vein it represents serious opinions. Such subjects as "Has Economics Gone to Seed?", "Psychology," "The Black Art of College" are discussed.

"Rising Star of India," by Anup Sing, a concise readable sketch of a probable leader of India. Gives highlights of the Indian political struggle.

"Heaven is About Us," by Howard Spring. An autobiography which should give writings, also a fine study of childhood.

"Life of Greece" by Will Durant. This book unfolds a civilization so like our own that having read the book we find we can better understand our own problems which resemble the Greeks in every detail but machinery.

"Bozonia Inn" by Oscar Lewis and Hall. This is a story of the famous Palace hotel of San Francisco which was the wonder of the world when it was built. Many celebrities visited there and the book gives some incidents of scandals of this eccentric city, very interesting.

"Along the Road" by Stanley Jones. This is a sequel to "Christ of the Indian Road."

Christianity Held First Principle Of U. S. Democracy

Education is one of the biggest "businesses" of this nation today and it is a cornerstone of our democratic system, but neither education to democracy can function properly without recognizing the basic necessity of Christian doctrine, it was declared here Thursday by Gertrude Crane, Pacific university faculty woman, in a talk before the Hillsboro Rotary club.

As an agency to pass culture on to our children, schools are playing their part well, Miss Crane said, but there is another problem in our national sociological structure which is being neglected. That problem is one of keeping our men and women normal, a task which cannot be accomplished without the help of true religion she declared.

Schools should not encourage American children to measure by materialistic standards—rather should they be made to realize that America is what it is today because of its saturation in Christian traditions. Nazism, fascism and communism, the Pacific university educator pointed out, are governmental systems which have completely thrown over democracy and with it—Christianity.

There is a difference, Miss Crane said, between Christianity and sectarianism. That the fundamental principles of Christianity are a sound basis for life psychologies is being realized and turned to more and more by young people who have seen the failure of aiming by other standards, she stated.

State universities and colleges, especially, should look more favorably upon the teaching of Christianity. Democracy cannot afford to let the government have exclusive control of the schools for a glance at the names listed in "Who's Who" will testify to the fact that independent colleges are still producing more than their share of the nation's leaders, she said.

B. F. Pile was program chairman.
