Barrel Shortage Hits Plant Here

(Continued from page 1) Chicago concern for the local pack. The barrel shortage in the state of Washington saw its inception this week when strawberry crops ripened earlier than expected and were twice as heavy as in an average season. The result was that the Tacoma plant was swamped with orders and forced to pro-rate barrels to its customers. Strike in Stalemate—The strike at the Western Coopera-ge plant, only major barrel-manu-facturing concern in Portland, has kept the factory's wheels stalled since March 5 and is now in a "stale-mate" which gives little promise of an early settlement, according to an Argus communication Tuesday with Jack Smith, Oregon manager of the co-opera-ge firm. Federal and state labor department conciliators have been attempting a solution of the labor difficulties for many weeks but their efforts have been to no avail, Smith reported. Union officials are said to be willing to release 1100 barrels, tied up by picket lines in the Port-land coopera-ge factory, for use by grower co-operatives only. Cannery-men here are pointing out, how-ever, that the harm being indirect-ly caused by the strike falls on growers regardless of whether they are in co-opera-tive associations or dealing with private companies. Other Plants on Strike—Coopera-ge strike conditions have also been reported from plants in Toledo and Seattle. At Tacoma, a coopera-ge union demands for a wage increase of 7 1/2 cents per hour were met by the employers. The Gresham Berry Growers' as-socia-tion plant which shut down is described as the largest single ber-ry-cann-er unit affected by the barrel shortage. Six hundred men are employed in the processing plant and between 6000 and 7000 pickers are employed in the fields supplying the plant. Operation of the plant at the present time, ac-cord-ing to J. J. Fisher, manager, is a matter of "living from day to day" with all depending on the number of barrels which can be used for contain-ers. Packing of county-grown straw-ber-ries at the Maling plant here has been diminishing the barrel supply at an accelerating rate, meanwhile, and plant officials are hoping that rain may delay heavy harvesting for a time sufficient to allow small bar-rel-manu-facturing concerns to sup-ply the needed contain-ers. By the time the barrels now on hand are packed with berries, about 75 per cent of the anticipated pack will have been completed, it was estimated by cannery men Tuesday. The pack thus far has been large enough to equal the entire pack of the 1938 season, they said. On Mon-day of this week, 1050 barrels were filled. The pack on Tuesday was even heavier, enough berries coming in on that day to bring the total for two days up to 2800 barrels.

night he whispers and urges and they come before him with their prayer group by whom God brings to pass his mighty purposes?—Paid adv.

Does God Answer Prayer?

(By George N. Taylor, Beaver-ton) "I haven't been to church in fifteen years, but I don't mind telling you that I'm thinking of starting again. I've been praying and it helps me." So the Oregonian quoted a man who phoned in. The state of the world and the threat to all we hold dear drove him to his knees. And having prayed, he felt better. But does God answer prayer? Over in Galt, Ontario, the high school group that meets Wednes-days for Bible study, had dwindled to a half-dozen and interest had fallen to a low ebb. In view of this run-down state of things, the visit-ing secretary from Toronto would see prayer put back of the work. Calls were made about town and the spiritually minded were urged to hold up the work in prayer. The Lord has his people of vision and faith for just such an hour and task as this. Here in Galt it was a woman and she began to plead that the Lord would revive his work among the young people. Some weeks passed but nothing seemed to be stirring. Yet God comes in when we claim the prom-ises. And behold! At length, four-teen grown-ups about the city phoned the woman that they also had begun to pray at the hour when the students had their week-ly meet. The next proof that God hears came on one of the follow-ing Wednesdays when for no seem-ing reason, the student group swell-ed to double size, with growth and interest mounting. And so you see, God does answer. How God Answers Prayer—What God purposes to do he lays on the heart of his prayer people. He burdens them. By day and by
