Anderson, secretary of the Rotary club, reports that during the trip he studied progress in modernization of mercantile establishments, and found the mid-west much more advanced in that line than the east. He also observed housing conditions in the cities visited, and stated that conditions are much more modern in the north than in the south and east, with the housing situation in Washington, D. C., the capital city, being particularly deplorable.

Leaving Hillsboro May 28, the family visited in Salt Lake and Denver before continuing to Rock Island, Illinois, where Mr. Anderson attended a meeting of the Augustana Synod as a delegate from this region.

From there the party made stops to visit relatives and friends at Racine, Wisconsin; Michigan City, Indiana; Lorain, Ohio, and Erie, Pennsylvania, and then went on to Washington, D. C., where most of the national buildings, monuments, and other historic attractions were inspected.

From Washington the itinerary included Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and the World's Fair, a back trip to Philadelphia and smaller eastern cities for visiting, then, through northern Michigan to Duineth, Minneapolis, Fergus Falls — at each of which stops were made.

Last jump was to Kalispell and Glacier National park, thence to Missoula, Grand Coulee, and home.
