Horseback Riders
A Common Sight

ALOHA-HUBER—Horseback riders are a common sight on our avenues. The horse-and-buggy days are coming back without the buggy. When a plain lady rides a beautiful horse one of them attracts admiring glances. Ex-governor Oswald West is quoted as saying, "The outside of a horse is good for the inside of a man." How proudly the thoroughbred steps and arches his neck when carrying his beloved master. "Hast thou given the horse strength?" Hast thou clothed his neck with "thunder"? A state fair without a "horse" race is not worth shucks. Ralph H. Jenkins' saddle horses over at Hazelade are retired on pension, and they call for more tenderly than are some old people on a meager pension.

We paid a visit to the beautiful country home of R. H. Jenkins at Hazelade. If one name were Ethel Romig Fuller, this bit of descriptive would rise to sublime heights of poetic art. The hillsides of dogwoods and maples are clouds of amethyst, ruby, sapphire and gold. The thousands of fall colors give promise of surviving through the coming winter. Song birds are always in tune, and fleet-footed and furry aborigines of the forest are so tame they lazily step aside out of your path. The nature-loving master goes to the fish pool, and spectrum-hued petals of the finny tribe thrust their snouts out of the water for morsels of food. Over all this realm of pleasures Queen October, who smiles and warms and invites.

Verne Bright attended a reception to the Grubstakeers, a literary society of Portland, at the home of a patron at McMinnville last Friday night.

Mrs. Harry Hutchinson is home from the hospital and is regaining her strength slowly.
