Early Soil Erosion Advice

"WASHED AND GULLIED PARTS OF A FIELD OUGHT TO BE LEVELED AND SMOOTHED, AND AS FAR AS IT CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED, COVERED WITH LITTER, STRAW, WEEDS, CORN STALKS OR ANY OTHER KIND OF VEGETATIVE RUBBISH TO BIND TOGETHER AND PREVENT THE EARTH FROM GULLYING."

... GEORGE WASHINGTON

The quotation shown in the illustration above was found in the agricultural papers of George Washington. It shows that nearly three centuries ago the man who directed the fight for American independence also carried on an agricultural battle for the preservation of the nation's soil resources.

George Washington Was Early Conservationist, Notes Show

If George Washington were alive today, he probably would be one of the active leaders in the present revived interest in soil conservation and erosion control, say those who have been studying his writings on agricultural matters.

J. H. Christ, regional head of the Soil Conservation service in the Pacific northwest, points out that this country's first president was an active and enthusiastic farmer who once said that "I know of no pursuit in which more real important services can be rendered to my country than by improving its agriculture."

Agricultural writings of George Washington, collected and edited by W. E. Brook, reveal that Washington was probably the first planter in Virginia to change from the wasteful soil depleting one-crop system. Virginians in his day grew tobacco year after year, sometimes following it with Indian corn. At Mt. Vernon tobacco was once the main crop, but it gradually decreased in importance giving place to wheat and other grains as well as to potatoes, carrots, flax and hemp grown for home use.

If Washington were here today, Christ believes he would, as a lover of land, be a leader in an aroused public consciousness that has in the past few years swung the pendulum from exploitation to conservation all across the country from his native Virginia to the Pacific northwest.

Hope for Future
Cited in Letter
From England

BUXTON—A. S. Onlemiller has just received a letter from a cousin in South Port, England. This cousin was a nurse in the World War and is now knitting for the navy and air force. Her letter cites the rationing of foodstuffs and expresses gratitude for tea sent her by Mrs. Onlemiller at Christmas. She says nobody removes their clothing at night as they never know when there will be an alarm. Once the writer was marooned in a school house for 25 hours waiting for a bomb to explode in the next block. The letter expressed hope and confidence that England would eventually win the war, looking forward to the day when Hitler would be no more. The letter was uncensored.

Mrs. Sam Feasel of Mohler visited her husband here over the week-end.

Application of Landplaster Held Protection for Vetch, Pea Crops

(By W. F. Cyrus, County Agent)

Landplaster, at the rate of approximately 100 pounds per acre, may well be applied immediately to most of the common and Willamette vetch and Austrian peas in Washington county. There are two reasons why it may be particularly desirable to get landplaster on these fields as soon as possible. There is a considerable amount of mildew, particularly on vetch. Entomologists have pointed out that conditions are particularly favorable for a really serious aphid infestation on the 1941 vetch and pea crops.

Landplaster will not kill any aphids and it will not destroy the mildew. On some farms the mildew has been serious enough to retard and almost stunt the growth of the plants. Landplaster can be expected to stimulate the growth and consequently should aid in producing a much more vigorous crop and should be of particular value in aiding these injured plants to recover.

Strength Increased
In the case of aphids, the landplaster will have no effect on them at all but the stimulated growth plants of greater vigor and much greater size. The aphids will work just as much on these large plants as on the small ones but the damage they do will not be as disastrous on the large rank growing stuff as it is on the weakened or undersized growth.

Weather conditions will have much to do with how serious the aphid infestation becomes. Dry weather such as has prevailed during a large part of February and as we have been having the first week of March, is favorable to the development and rapid reproduction of aphids.

Rain is Factor
Lots of spring moisture might change the situation and it could be possible that the infestation would be no more serious than it has been in many other years. Growers do not entirely agree as to the desirability of applying landplaster to vetch and peas but it seems rather well established that providing there is ample moisture for the crop that the use of landplaster will increase the seed yield. It is only in seasons when there is adequate moisture towards the end of the season that the rank growth stimulated by landplaster results in poor yields.
