

Wood, Too, Is Vital to Defense of U. S.

Wood from nation's forests is needed to house Uncle Sam's new draft army in barracks.

WASHINGTON.—United States farm woodlands are now producing about two billion cubic feet of wood a year, but improved management could multiply this by three.

That's the assertion made at the recent annual meeting of the Society of American Forestry in Washington. General range of discussion at the convention covered the points of forest conservation, forest cultivation, the proper way to cut trees and the enormous use of wood in the national defense program.

Field Marshal Hermann Goering, it was pointed out, places wood second on the list of Germany's war necessities. The United States still has an advantage over Germany in lumber supply, despite U. S. wastefulness and German conservation. This country has about five acres of forest per capita to Germany's one acre per capita.

In the present defense program the United States needs huge quantities of wood for the erection of army cantonments for its drafted army, for the building of penitentiaries and for containers for the shipment of explosives. In addition, wood is required for the charcoal in gas masks and plywood for the manufacture of trainer planes.

Lacking vital resources, Germany has invented ways of making them from wood, which the United States could emulate if the necessity arose. It has long been known that German chemists extract from wood a useful motor fuel. As the crop of beet root has not been sufficient for the sugar needs of Germany, a method has been invented whereby they get edible sugars from wood.

There have been many jokes about German wooden suits, but the fact is that from cellulose procured from wood clever chemists have created synthetic wool and cotton.

R. D. GARVER, director of the United States Forest Service's survey, estimates that full development of American forest lands could provide work for an additional 2,000,000 men a year. He says that back in 1936 American forest resources gave directly or indirectly about 4,000,000 year-long jobs.

He urgently warns against cutting timber unwisely, says more forest growth is a real necessity if all present and future requirements are to be met.

In old countries like Germany and France there are still extensive forests because under conservation laws when matured trees were cut, young trees had to be planted, so as to keep up the acreage and even increase it.

Legislative Session Nearing End; Many Seek Liquor Control Post

(By Vernon Williams)

STATE HOUSE, Salem, March 12.—The gavel is ready to drop which will adjourn sine die the 41st legislative assembly. Seven highly controversial bills still remain in the house or senate, where they are getting "the works," so to speak.

Last Saturday afternoon Representative Lonergan's sales tax bill went down to defeat by the narrow margin of three votes. Now in the last hours of the session an attempt is being made to revive the measure, which is about the last chance for increased pensions this session.

A score of lawmakers are bombarding the governor with applications for the job of liquor administrator. As we told you in this column two weeks ago, Joseph Hague had tendered his resignation, on account of illness, which was to take effect March 31, after the legislature had adjourned. However, the untimely passing of Mr. Hague last week caused the matter to be brought to a head with the legislature still in session. There is no end to the number of applicants for this lucrative job, which pays $6,000 a year. Many senators and representatives are moving heaven and earth to land this berth for themselves. And what a headache it is to the governor.

Senate bill 53 was the hottest bill before the house last week. Every parliamentary trick in the book was resorted to in order to kill the measure. The commercial fishermen, when the bill hit—and how—moved a sizeable lobby in on the lawmakers, but without avail. Seven or eight legislators attempted to amend the bill on the floor, but this move was made to send it back to committee for further study, which likewise failed. So the boys had to resort to oratory. Speeches galore were made against the bill by numerous of the lawmakers from the coast and river counties, who pleaded that the measure would ruin commercial fishing, but their colleagues stood tough. Came the roll call and the bill passed by a whooping majority.

Potato Growers Use Diversion Plan

Applications for the diversion of approximately seven million pounds of potatoes to stock feed purposes had been made by some 75 Oregon farmers in the commercial potato district of central and southern Oregon by the end of the first week in March, according to N. C. Donaldson, executive officer for the state AAA committee. The AAA will pay about $17,800 for this diversion.

The applications so far have come from Klamath, Crook, and Deschutes counties in Oregon, and Siskiyou and Modoc counties, across the line in California. The diversion program for Malheur county, Oregon, is being handled through the Idaho office.

The diversion program will continue through March and most of April. Growers interested in applying for diversion permits with the resultant payments of 25 cents per hundred may make application through the county AAA committees of commercial potato counties.

Vetch Inspection Project Begun

Field inspection work on some 17,000 acres of the new Willamette vetch has been started by representatives of the extension service at Oregon State college. Willamette vetch is a new strain of common vetch originated at the Oregon experiment station, but which has proved satisfactory as a winter legume crop in the south where common vetch is not suitable.

The Agricultural Adjustment administration established a guaranteed price on Willamette vetch last fall but required that all production must be certified as the new strain cannot be distinguished from common vetch by appearance. A total of 795 farmers in western Oregon planted Willamette vetch last fall. Polk county leads in acreage, followed by Washington and Yamhill counties.
