

On one fine day in June, 1890, Wilson Brock and Ed Sels opened their new drug store, the same store that is now doing business as Delta Drug. At the time it was opened, the firm of Brock and Sels—with its lavish interior decorating and ornate fixtures—was one of the state's most ultra-modern pharmacies. Frank Mitchell, who only recently sold out his interest in Delta Drug to Fred Engeldinger, now sole proprietor, went to work for Brock and Sels in the year of the store's establishment and became a registered pharmacist a year later. The picture above shows the old store as it appeared shortly after its opening. Wilson Brock is at left, Frank Mitchell at right. . . . News then . . . remember when?
