Ideas Given for Safe Picnic Food

When preparing food for outdoor and community meals this summer keep picnic meats, eggs, sandwiches, salads and cooked desserts in the refrigerator until just before serving. Sandwiches of cooked ham, tongue, egg or mayonnaise, made up ahead of the meal, must be kept in a cold place to be safe for eating in hot weather. The same is true of other moist foods, such as salads of chicken, egg or potato, salad dressings, cream sauce, cream puffs, custard pie, custard-filled cake or other soft moist cakes.

These foods frequently are the cause of food poisoning in hot weather simply because many people do not realize the need for keeping them cold after cooking. When prepared in large quantities, such as for picnics, it is too often left standing in a warm kitchen. Many people do not understand that the lightly cured, pre-cooked ready-to-serve ham should be kept refrigerated. A common kind of bacteria causing food poisoning does not show up in the taste or odor of food.
