Red Cross Aids Nurse Recruiting

American Red Cross is aiding in the recruitment of nurses badly needed in the army and navy. 10,000 in the army immediately, for all-out campaigns on all fronts, returning wounded to this country, and mounting casualties. The navy needs 6000 by July 1, for the two-ocean defense, the defense against Japan, and mounting casualties.

Miss Corinne Pennington is the county Red Cross chairman in charge of nurse recruitment, and may be contacted at the county health office in the courthouse, Telephone 3461.

Colonel Florence Blanchfield, superintendent of the army nurse school, says: "We have been telling the nurses and the public of the army that we have not but so much emphasis on the MUST. Now we not only need 10,000 more nurses, but we MUST get under way in June and the picture is entirely changed because of the greatly increased load of casualties."

The authorized ratio of nurses to patients in the army is one nurse to every 15 men in hospitals in this country, and one nurse to every 12 men in hospitals overseas. In the Continental United States the army nurse ratio is now about one to 22.

The navy's quota is based on a ratio of three nurses per thousand in the naval, marine and coast guard personnel. If further provision for care of dependents is made by legislation, this ratio must be increased.

Civilian hospitals consider a ratio of one nurse to four or five patients just barely sufficient.
