Alcoa Heads Visit Local Operations

(Continued from page 1) opening in 1949. Both Davis and Wilson said that the exact location of the aluminum plant Alcoa has announced it will build in this area still has not been determined. "But we have always felt confident that markets could be developed for our products so that integration of our operations in the west would be economically justifiable," he said. "What our search for ores in the area and processes for working them will reveal it is, as yet, impossible to say. Alcoa engineers are drilling and conducting test operations on alumina-bearing ores in the Hillsboro vicinity. Their reports will tell pretty well the extent of these ores. "Our company's laboratories at New Kensington, Pa., and East St. Louis, Ill., are investigating this aluminum material, which is of an unusual type, in order to determine processes by which the material might be successfully treated on a commercial basis," he continued. Davis and Wilson agreed that it would be impossible at this time to comment intelligently on the possibility of leasing or buying existing industrial projects. "There are a number of factors involved," Mr. Davis explained. "For one thing, the Federal Surplus Property Act provides that the Surplus Property Board must prepare a plan for the disposal of all government-owned aluminum facilities and that this plan must be approved by Congress. Until this action has been taken, it is useless to talk about plans. Markets can be developed either in this country or abroad which can utilize a considerable portion of the output for which facilities now exist in the northwest," Davis said. He laid emphasis on the potential market in China which can be developed if American ingenuity, enterprise and experience is devoted to this task. Charles Martin Hall, the inventor of the electrolytic process for extracting aluminum from its ores, was one of the early business associates of Davis, and as young men these two were the principal workers in the Pittsburgh Reduction company, which later became Aluminum Company of America. Alcoa's oldest employee in point of years of service, Davis was a major factor in the development of Alcoa's peacetime markets. He was president of the company through World War I and has been chairman of the board throughout World War II. He was active in the execution of the expansion program for defense and war in which Alcoa spent more than $500,000,000 of its own funds. A dinner was given in honor of the three Alcoa leaders at the Benson hotel in Portland Monday night by the Portland chamber of commerce. Representatives were present from Hillsboro, Gresham, Salem, Portland and Vancouver, attending from here were Mayor E. A. Griffith, W. C. Christensen, Verne McKinney and A. M. Jannsen of Beaverton, who is handling the drug operations for the company in the northern part of the county.

County 'E' Bond Quota Still Short

(Continued from page 1) declared. Washington county has never failed to meet its assigned quota and he called on county residents to keep the record clean by buying E bonds up to the limit. He called attention to the fact that local banks are paying interest through June 30 on all savings accounts drawn out now for the purchase of series E war bonds. Total of $16,359 was invested in E war bonds in Hillsboro last Thursday during the local retailers' "Over the Top" day. Sixteen "jeeps," veterans of the South Pacific campaigns, came out from Portland with Red Cross Motor corps drivers. The "jeeps" were busy for two hours giving rides to bond buyers. Following the street rally, the crowd was invited to see "To the Shores of Iwo Jima" at the Venetian theatre. John Hodgkins, assistant state administrator for the seventh war loan, and Senator P. L. Patterson of Hillsboro spoke on behalf of the war loan campaign.
