Fats and Oils Major Shortage

Fats and oils are a major world shortage according to a statement recently made by spokesmen for the Famine Emergency committee created by President Truman to avert starvation among the poorest people of Europe and Asia. While this world shortage of fats and oils is reflected in the United States by reduced production of soap and other industrial products, in countries other than the Americas there is in addition a grave dearth of food fats which are a prime essential to maintain health.

"Obviously," comments the American Fat Salvage committee, "we cannot use waste from American kitchens to feed the starving people of the world, but every American woman can save her cooking fats for reuse. After she has gotten the food values out of them she should turn in her used fats for industrial uses. This will mean that industry will not have to make as great demands on the over-all supply of available fats and oils and that more food fats can go to feed the starving."

"It is apparent in an overall world deficit of fats and oils, such as is reported by the department of agriculture and the Famine Emergency committee, that every pound of fat that can be released from industrial uses is needed for food. Therefore consistent salvage of used household grease will make available more food fat supplies, by providing industrial fats and oils for the United States."

"Collections of used kitchen fats are currently averaging approximately 13,000,000 pounds a month for industrial uses that normally would be wasted. In terms of our own needs as well as the world economy, it is almost criminal to waste fats and oils these days, yet millions of pounds of used kitchen grease are still being thrown away or poured down the kitchen drain."

"Until fats and oils can be produced and imported in quantity from the Philippines and other oil producing areas—which may take another year—used cooking fats will be needed to keep industry supplied with essential raw materials for soap, paper, ink, floor coverings, fabrics, leather products."

"American women have a tremendous opportunity to help themselves and the rest of the world by using and reusing every pound of used cooking fat and then turning it in. In that way it will do double duty first as food and then to make personal and household goods and allow more equitable distribution of fats and oils throughout the grease-starved world."

Meat dealers authorized to pay four cents per pound for all used fat turned in.
