Klamath Falls School Holds Much Promise

Oregon's brand-new eight million dollar vocational school at Klamath Falls is well on the way toward becoming the state's most impressive institution for teaching crafts, occupations and skills to those who combine handwork with brainwork or a livelihood according to Dolph G. Sauer, Washington county service officer.

Included among courses scheduled for the ex-marine barracks school are body and fender work, automobile mechanics, cooking and baking, metal mechanics, mechanics and business management. Additional information on the school may be obtained by contacting Stuart in the basement of the county courthouse in Hillsboro.

Training Completed

Capt. Henry W. Hart of Hillsboro was among air reservists who have completed two weeks of active duty at McChord Field, Wash. It was announced this week.
