Legume, Cover Crop to Exceed 1947 Poundage

Prospects for a large legume and cover crop seed supply this year are bright, with a heavier-than-usual responsibility on seed dealers, according to local AAA office. In the Pacific Northwest, crops of Austrian winter peas, common ryegrass and hairy vetch may be one-fourth larger. In the southeast, the blue lupine seed crop will be larger than last year's 37 million pounds. In Texas farmers may harvest as much as 100,000 acres of their hairy vetch for seed.

Besides these main crops, there are crops of the less important vetches in Oregon, of crimson clover, and some carry-over seed of Sudan grass and Alyce clover. Seed handlers will find an increasingly large number of customers for these seeds. Acreage of cover and green manure crops has increased since they were first included in the agricultural conservation program in 1936.

Winter legume and green manure crops increased from 5,385,000 acres in 1944 to 6,880,000 in 1945. Ryegrass cover crops increased from 300,000 to 500,000 acres in the same time. There is still plenty of room for expansion, however. The committeemen who helped carry out the agricultural conservation program say that there should be 25 million acres of winter legume cover and green-manure crops—in other words, for every acre grown now, there should be 4½ acres. There should be eight times as many acres under ryegrass cover crop every winter as now.

Art Says . . .

It's strange how we can enjoy the fireworks in the southeast end of town but not the one in the southwest end. I guess I was living too close to that one, but I did take time out even in my slippers to witness the cremation of several buildings with which I was very closely associated a few years ago. After seeing that there was nothing that a novice could do to assist, I only, as thousands of other spectators, could offer was suggestions, as I knew how the fireworks were Friday night. It was far different than they worked Wednesday night. As I was saying I had only thin slippers on, and didn't make allowance for the dog hair I had to go through for a shortcut, I was suffering terribly, and started for home to change, when a fireman, yelled, "We want more hose." I replied, "I'll do the best I can. I think the Mrs. has a couple of nylons of pre war time, I'll bring them." A farmer standing nearby hearing the word "hose," said I have a dozen in my trailer. So he brought them, he said he got through hoeing his berries and they could have them. I told him to give one to an old Indian that was looking on, but when he offered it the Indian said, "Ug. me Navaho." Well whose goin' to get the hose. I was very sorry for Mr. Olsen, the S. P. agent, he didn't know of his disaster till he went to work the next morning, and finding the depot gone, his first impulse was to check all trains that left during the night to find the one that took his depot for a caboose. I know they happen that way sometime as you often see some of the most ridiculous contraptions used in that capacity. In fact when I worked at the Imperial a few years ago I drove my car and a trailer one evening and got out just in time to keep a conductor from tieing it to the end of a log train. Just because it had a tail light on. I suppose he thought me being a blockhead that was the appropriate place for it. Coming to the dog hair I don't want any of my readers to think that I sleep in a kennel. Well dog on—A. J. M.
